Slide Danger Eases On Oregon's Roads

By United Press International

Oregon's siege of mud and rock slides was expected to level off Wednesday with dry weather forecast, but pesky fog through Thursday with a broad ridge of high pressure and night and morning fog in west-warm air covering the Pacific ern valleys and at the coast Northwest. should prevail.

At Astoria, the threat of slides remained, but no new evacuations were reported during the night from hillside residences. Police said there was a new mud slide around the Ray Thygesen home, but the family had left the home a day before and spent the night in Seaside.

WHILE THERE was no new rain Tuesday there was a problem of seepage into the heavily saturated ground from water main leakage.

The Tongue Point Job Corps Center near Astoria was down to the water supply in its storage tank after a 200-foot slide damaged a 24-inch concrete water main from Bear Creek Reservoir.

THE IMPROVED weather allowed road crews to clear away slides from roads in the western part of the state, although some one-way traffic still was expected to slow traffic Wednesday.

Minor flooding was reported at Seaside where Neawanna Creek overflowed its banks Tuesday.

Retired teachers meet for lunch at Tongue Point

The January 7 meeting of Sunset unit, Oregon Retired Teachers' Association, was at Tongue Point, in one of the Job Corps mess halls, with 82 members present. As a fund-raising project, hostess Emily Olsen offered for sale an assortment of attractive note paper.

President Dorothy Sandon offered for general reading a handsome volume "The Wisdom of Edgel Parey Andrus," presented to the unit by the national association. Dr. Andrus is the planner of the Gerontology Center about to be constructed on the campus of the University of Southern California.

The state is asking for nominations for second vice president, secretary, and treasurer.

It was voted that, beginning next year, each member be assessed $2 for incidental expenses, in place of holding raffles and other money-making projects. Individual contributions are not barred.

Elsie Silver and Maud Crouter reported on the special trip to the Ice Follies in Portland. Agnes Ramvick announced special rates offered retirees on a trip to Reno in May. Mina Jackson gave a "show and tell" exhibit of souvenirs collected last summer in Spain, Portugal and Morocco.

The ORTA state conference will be held March 16 and 17 at the Mallory hotel in Portland.

An appetizing lunch was served in the cafeteria, where two of the Job Corps trainees, Ella Williams and Ruth Jackson, offered a group of songs. The unit gives thanks and appreciation for the entertainment.

The next meeting will be March 4, at the Tolovana Park club hall.

Tornadoes Kill Corpswomen Kin

Two Tongue Point Job Corps sisters were under sedation today after learning Monday night that two Mississippi relatives were killed by tornadoes which swept through the south Sunday.

Brenda and Shirley Rodgers, both 19, from Belzoni, Miss., learned from the Mississippi Red Cross that an uncle and a cousin had died, an aunt was in critical condition and other relatives were injured in the twisters which have killed 84 persons in Mississippi, Louisiana and the Carolinas.

Dr. Dorothy Burns, director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, said some 40 per cent of the girls are from the Deep South and many are awaiting communications from their families and friends there.

Contacting the Red Cross for the Rodgers sisters was Lena Banks, with the Civil Air Patrol. She explained that Red Cross units outside a disaster area have a policy against contacting the disaster area for information until 48 hours have passed, thus allowing lists of injured and known dead to be compiled.

However, Mrs. Banks said she was able to communicate with Red Cross units in several towns hit by the tornadoes and verify that relatives of Tongue Point girls were not injured or dead. Full reports will not be available for several days, she said, when Job Corpswomen will be able to request contact with relatives in the areas if they have not received word from them.

. . .while designers spurn the midi at Tongue Point's fashion show

TONGUE POINT, Oreg.—Hemline hysteria hit the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women at a fall fashion show recently.

Corpswomen, modeling their own creations, mirrored the fashion industry's ups and downs. The women wore everything from mini tunics to floor-length formals. Pantsuits were another favorite.

But the midi was not very popular.

Show participants were students in the center's clothing construction classes. The amateur designers were judged on their modeling and clothing during the show.

Judging was based on construction of clothing as well as style, presentation, and choice of fabric. Judges were Miss Clatsop County, Mary Craig, and Chris Crockett, a local radio disc jockey.

Show winners were Corpswomen Vernette Washington, Margaret Elachik, and Ann Marie Huffman. Vernette wore a tunic dress, and Margaret chose a traditional shirt dress. Ann Marie modeled a formal gown.

The style show was held following a buffet luncheon in the Tee Pee Room at Tongue Point.

Workers for Disadvantaged Needed, Dr. Burns Says

The director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center says the country needs desperately persons who have the desire and skills to work with the disadvantaged. "These aren't enough persons in this field," said Dr. Dorothy Burns Friday. "People who have the feeling, as well as the training, to work in this area. The future of the country is wrapped up in this."

Speaking to Astoria Chamber of Commerce members Friday, Dr. Burns said friends had written her to ask why she had left a "sedate" women's college in California for a Job Corps center. The Tongue Point director said it was because working with disadvantaged youth was "a challenge" to her. She said the country needs more persons in that field and "massive" amounts of government funding.

The bespectacled official said she thought the Job Corps facility would remain at Tongue Point "for some time." She said she felt the national Administration had "a genuine commitment to such programs as ours," but that funding was the big problem, especially with growing military costs. "Every dollar has to be fought for," she said.

Dr. Burns said the fact that roughly half of the disadvantaged young women are from rural areas favors continuation of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, because it's difficult to train the rural girls in urban centers.

The Tongue Point director reminisced about arriving at her job at a time when a corpswoman had drowned in the county, the Center received some 300 girls in a short period and couldn't handle them and some of the girls protested what they believed to be racial discrimination on the part of some staff members.

She said the Center graduates some 40 per cent of the young women who enter Tongue Point, a percentage she said compared favorably with national figures. She said she hoped the figure could be boosted to 50 per cent.

Dr. Burns said of the 70 to 80 per cent of the graduates Tongue Point places in jobs, the success factor in job continuation is good. But the rate of success when the girls are placed in jobs by their state employment agencies isn't so high, she said.

The director said Clatsop College had been helpful in teaching some of the corpswomen. Some 60 trainees have gone on to the University of Oregon, with some of them having perfect or near-perfect grades. "To me, this is amazing," she said.

Dr. Burns said the Center appreciated the help and understanding of Astorians. "The community seems to have recognized we're trying to do a massive job of rehabilitation, not always with success," she said.

Dr. Burns said some 70 per cent of the corpswomen at Tongue Point were blacks, a large number from Southern states. She said a high proportion of disadvantaged young women are in the minority groups, and said racial prejudice in the South has prevented programs in that region which would help minority-group members.

The Job Corps facility has a "tremendous impact" on the community, she said, with an annual budget of some $4 million.

Dr. Burns said the Center had received a rather favorable evaluation from a federal inspection team recently, although the Center was criticized in certain procedural areas but rated favorably in the substantive matters.

TONGUE POINT, Oreg.—The Tongue Point Women's Job Corps Center put out the welcome mat recently for new arrivals from Alaska. The community joined in the welcome.

One of the Alaskan girls' first trips off-center was to a local high school. There they visited geography classes and talked about their home State. They were accompanied by some "senior" Alaskan Corpswomen.

Priscilla Melton, one of the new Corpswomen, says she likes Tongue Point already. She wants to get her GED, complete nurse aide training, and return to Alaska.

"I will try to work in Noorvik, where my home is," she told The Corpsman. "There are only two nurse aides there now, and they need more."

Shirley Henry, who has been at the center for about 9 months, was one of the Alaskan Corpswomen to visit the high school geography classes.

"The kids really were thrilled to learn about our far-away State and Eskimo life there," she reports. "They most enjoyed my demonstration of an Eskimo yo-yo."

Margaret Elachik, another Alaskan Corpswoman, has also been at the center 9 months. She had some words of experience for the new enrollees.

"When I first came to Tongue Point, I was scared," she told them, "but then I found out I didn't have to be. Everyone here is pulling for you.

"Now I'm learning a lot and meeting many different people as well."

Shirley says she likes it so much at Tongue Point that she wants to stay on after her training is completed. "I may go to work here as an orientation aide," she says. "One way or another, I hope to stay."

Arrested with Miss Favors was a 22-year-old man from Ft. Lewis, Wash. The altercation reportedly involved nine men Miss Favors, and two Tongue Point Security Officers. A security spokesman said the incident started at the Ponderosa Lounge at the center and was continued onto the grounds at the main gate of the center.

Fashion Show Held at Tongue Point

The Tee Pee Room at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center was the setting for the Corpswomen's Spring Style Show on Friday February 12, during the noon buffet luncheon. The range of styles in the 28 costumes modeled by their creators was sports wear to formal gowns and displayed a keen interest in fashion and sewing. The costumes were made by the girls for their own wardrobes and were a project of the Basic Education Sewing classes under the direction of Helen O. Pitkanen.

Producer Bud Gavino announced that other staff members involved in the fashion program were Mary Poteet, Executive Housekeeping Instructor, and student teacher Logan Payne. The Food Service Occupation staff handled the buffet arrangements for the Tee Pee Room.

Center Instructor Outlines Job Corps Drafting Program

An outline of the drafting program offered at Tongue Point Job Corps Center was presented by Ken Loftin, drafting instructor, during the recent Tongue Point Community Relations Council meeting.

Loftin said many of the corpswomen, upon first arriving at the center, want to know "is that like in the army?" He explained that from there the instructing usually began.

During Center Director Dr. Dorothy Burns' report, she brought the council up to date on upcoming items as well as projects already under way. She said a letter from the Dept. of Labor is forthcoming and "to us it is of great consequence . . ." and that it would be the "first formal offer of renewal of contract" and should contain "stipulations in line with the review team report".

Dr. Burns reported on progressing plans for intensive summer workshop programs at the center including teacher instruction in vocational education, counseling, psychology and other fields. The program is being initiated in hopes that members of the Tongue Point Staff will be able to attend. Their employment of 12 months of the year, unlike most teachers with nine month stanzas, make furthering their education difficult.

She told of recent labor negotiations with Tongue Point staff and told the council that salaries were not discussed as they are set by the government but fringe benefits were negotiated with final decisions to be made later.

Corpswomen representatives from the residences gave brief reports of activities both past and upcoming and their impressions of various happenings of recent weeks. The upcoming Miss Tongue Point pageant was discussed with particular attention given to needed flowers for centerpieces and bouquets for the contestants.

Afro-Fashions

Several corpswomen from Tongue Point Job Corps Center, Wednesday afternoon, modeled Afro-fashions they had created in sewing classes at the center. Here Lillian Martin, Humboldt, Tenn., wears a floor-length dashiki of orange and green floral design. The neckline is round with a streaming cape at the back. Neckline and cape are trimmed in black. Bandana is of matching material.

Lounging Outfit

Eunice Maxwell chose a two-piece floral designed loungi outfit, her own creation. The top is triangular shaped with open back and butterfly sleeves. The skirt is straight with a dr string at the waist and has deep slits for leg freedom.

Corpswoman finds job in DC office

When a student leaves the Tongue Point Job Corps Center after graduation, she is assigned to one of 32 YWCA'S that operate under the program known as JCYW. Here the young woman continues her training for two to six months, placed on a job by the YWCA. Until she completes this portion of the schooling, evaluations on her performance on the job and at the "Y" are forwarded to Tongue Point.

Included in recent evaluations received by Tongue Point describing the progress of Corpswomen placed in JCYWs was a report on former Corpswomen Vernette Brenda Washington.

Miss Washington graduated from Tongue Point Dec. 15, and following her home leave reported to the JCYW in Washington, D.C., Jan. 15.

Her first assignment; clerk typist at Job Corps Headquarters, Office of the Director William Mirengoff.

The progress report received on Vernette's first two weeks of work was "Glowing", writes Mrs. Navie Tatum, counselor-administrator for the JCYWs. "We could not have made a wiser choice than to place Miss Washington in the office of the Director of Job Corps. She is doing a 'smashing' job, and in the words of her supervisor, they are 'delighted' to have her with them. For some time we have considered placing a Corpswoman in the Director's Office, but did not do so. Miss Washington is poised, calm, intelligent and attractive. When I called the supervisor to find out how she was doing, Mrs. Quereux stated that, in a conference with the director, she had suggested that she call me to tell me how delighted they were with Miss Washington and her job performance. She described her in glowing terms."

Tongue Point awards 500th GED

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. — The Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women has hit the 500 mark in GED certificates.

The 500th GED went to Corpswoman Christine Thornton. The certificate was presented recently at a special center ceremony.

To earn her GED, Chris completed material that is covered by 124 lesson booklets in the GED program. She is enrolled in nurse aide training at Tongue Point. She is also taking some clerical courses.

"Chris makes superior grades and is always on the honor role," says Suzanne Maxson, her counselor.

Christine finds time in her busy schedule to work as a dorm aide and act as a "big sister" to Job Corps newcomers.

Shortly, she plans to transfer to the Philadelphia JC-YWCA program, where she will complete her on-the-job training.

Accident Injures Two Girls

Two Tongue Point Job Corps girls were injured in a one-car accident about three-fourths of the way up the Coxcomb Hill road at approximately 12:10 a.m. Sunday, according to Astoria police.

Injured and taken to the Job Corps Center by a passing motorist were Janet Barrett, 20, and Vicki E. Hart, 17. Also taken to the Center after the accident were the driver, Willard Johnson, 19, and another passenger, William LeBlanc Jr., 21, both of Portland. There was no indication whether they were injured.

Police said there was nobody at the scene when they arrived to investigate. The car had gone off the left side of the road and struck a tree, they said. The front of the car was extensively damaged and the windshield on the right side was broken, as if it had been struck by somebody's head.

There were 60 feet of skid marks leading up to the vehicle, police said.

Guardsman, corpswoman wed

Mrs. Arvilla Harris, formerly Deborah Jones, was a student in Business and Clerical at Tongue Point Job Corps Center when she met her then-to-be husband, Harris, a Coast Guardsman stationed at Tongue Point Coast Guard Station. Deborah graduated recently from the training center and the couple is honeymooning in Tuscaloosa, Ala., visiting her family. They will then be living in Texas while Harris completes further Coast Guard training. For the last six months at Tongue Point, Miss Jones was a member of the Miss Tongue Point Court.

This appreciation is one of the main purposes of the center.

'Ecology Kick' Is Here to Stay

Speculation that "the ecology kick" would run its course and fade from the public spotlight hasn't come true, and it probably won't. Extensive Earth Week and Earth Day activities this week give ample evidence of continued public concern about pollution of all sorts.

Among antipollution activities in Clatsop County now, some part of Earth Week and others not, are roadside litter pick-ups, can and bottle recycling drives, an information campaign on packaging of products and a slide show on the cycle of life in estuaries. The Clatsop Environmental Council, Tongue Point Job Corps personnel and school people are among participating groups.

The continued concern about our environment, one of the main political issues in the country, could be attributed to the idealistic appeal of pollution control to the young. Or because it's novel — something different from war, taxes and civil rights. Or perhaps because it's gutsy and exciting: Sen Muskie says the FBI put last year's Earth Day program in Washington, D.C., under surveillance.

The more likely reason protection of the environment remains a major issue is that pollution is a real, tangible problem in this country, a problem which must be attacked.

Americans simply can't keep making and using more and more food, drink and other containers without recycling them. Some of the big cities are already transporting garbage fantastic distances for burial. Manufacturing and processing plants simply can't keep pouring emissions into the water and the air. Even parts of the ocean have become decaying waste dumps. The atmosphere over the cities has become more smoggy and more stifling. The farms have major problems in smoke from field burning and the disposal of livestock wastes from feedlots. It's apparent that the automobile must somehow be regulated — in numbers, in pollutants, in speed and in where it goes. Enough of the uncivilized areas of the country must be protected for the growing population. And adequate controls must be found to make the country safe for nuclear power facilities.

State Rep. Irvin Mann said recently technology would bail the country out of its pollution problems. "We're simply in a five-year emergency," he said. He forecasted such developments as glass and aluminum collection and recycling centers, smokeless incinerators to burn garbage, metal-shredding plants and portable farm field incinerators.

Technology does seem to be responding to the antipollution needs, but Mann's statement makes it sound too easy. It takes more than the development of technology; people and their legislators must make the legal and financial commitments utilizing the technology and requiring the utmost in antipollution measures.

For example, the aluminum industry has developed fume capture and treatment methods that apparently can make an aluminum-reduction plant safe, regarding potential damage from fluorides and other emissions. But that isn't enough. Required to make such a plant acceptable are state laws requiring the latest in pollution controls and efficient operation of such controls, a commitment by the company to operate the pollution-control equipment correctly and, perhaps most important, a commitment from the people and their elected officials to enforce pollution-control laws at the risk of displeasing private industry and shutting down plants in violation of the laws.

The State of Oregon is making a good many commitments. The Legislature is taking action this session on field burning, slash burning, carbon monoxide emissions from cars, protection of streams, oil spills, solid-waste management, water pollution bonds, noise pollution and creation of a nuclear energy council.

Oregonians are surely not doing everything they should to combat the various types of pollution, but they're taking steps. Not because of any "ecology kick" but out of necessity.

Baker's Dozen

Items From The Cigar Box

Jim Cameron, onetime popular director of the Portland Civic Theater now with the Job Corps at Tongue Point, will get his hand into Portland Little Theater again beginning Saturday night and each Saturday night thereafter at the Portland Motor Hotel. He's directing a revue of 30 sketches and musical numbers known as "Present Tense" and featuring such thespians as B. Joe Medley, Mitzi Ellis, Margaret Appleton, Bob Griggs and Caroline Nelson. It's a dinner show with the salads served at 6:30 p.m. . . . Several years ago this column had some comment on a "donkey shower" held for a pregnant donkey owned by Bob and Johnnie Davis on their island retreat in the West Indies. (The infant donkey, promptly christened "Doug Baker," behaved in a disgraceful way to his mother and had to be destroyed.) Now, I learn that the Women's Association of Allied Beverage Industries (the gals who own and work in taverns and saloons) had a "cow shower" the other night for Leona Cogburn, owner of The Clinic, one of whose cows had a calf. Among the gifts were a receiving blanket, milk stool, a block of salt (the centerpiece wreathed in small flower buds), a cow bell, cow bib, etc., etc. The gals thought it all "hilarious," but I'm glad I missed it . . . Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cook of Cook's Cleaners leave this week for Hawaii. It took them 12 years to save the 110 books of green stamps which will give them accommodations, cruises, etc., but not transportation to the islands. A few gallons of pineapple juice should help dispel the taste of all that glue.

Tongue Point to be setting for workshops

For the first time the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women in Astoria will be the setting for two workshops offered by the 1971 Summer Session at the University of Oregon.

The center will serve as a learning laboratory for college seniors and graduate students, secondary school teachers and counselors during two four-week workshops, each offering six units of credit. The two sessions are sponsored by the UO departments of curriculum and instruction, and counseling.

The first begins June 21 and ends July 16 and includes a seminar on Disadvantaged Environments and Learning Problems to study which aspects of poverty and membership in minority groups cause special learning difficulties in traditional schools.

Also included in the first workshop, which is called "Culture and Learning," is a unit called Supervised Experience in Teaching Disadvantaged Youth, with emphasis on reading, math and vocational training.

The second workshop "Culture and Personal Adjustment" focuses on the personal adjustment problems of the disadvantaged and includes a practicum on counseling disadvantaged students. The program extends from July 19 through Aug. 13.

Both workshops are limited to 50 students, and students may enroll in either one or both sessions.

Camp Adair, USIU And Politics

The muddle over what to do with the abandoned Air Force base at Camp Adair near Corvallis is now back where it started a year and a half ago — with one significant difference.

The difference is that politics seeped into the muddle late last year. A result was some hair pulling and nail scratching that could fester into some political sores by campaign time in 1972.

The pullers and the scratchers were Sen. Mark Hatfield, Gov. Tom McCall, and Rep. Wendell Wyatt—all of them potential candidates for the Republican nomination for senator next year.

What occurred is very recent history. On the same day that Corvallis people happened upon the United States International University as a potential tenant, the university's president, Dr. William Rust, was in town for a look at Camp Adair as a potential campus.

Negotiations proceeded from that happy coincidence, and USIU set about adding 257 acres and 53 buildings at Camp Adair to its collection of eight campuses in this country and three campuses overseas.

Eight campuses, here in this country? Hatfield wondered about that. He got curiouser and curiouser after the Oregon Statesman in Salem printed a detailed series of articles about the school.

Walter Evans III, a Hatfield aide, accumulated two giant files of data about USIU. From them, Hatfield asked further questions about fuzzy financial reports, late loan payments, and administration business practices.

Related questions, including one about whether Oregon could effectively use another private college, were raised in the Legislature.

The defense of USIU was handled by Wyatt and McCall. Wyatt sought to answer Hatfield's apprehensions, and McCall said his own investigation revealed no reason for not going along with USIU.

Both asked, in substance, what else are we going to do with the place?

Now USIU has announced it will withdraw from Camp Adair and hand back the deed it got Feb. 1 for much of the property. Rust said the political climate that developed was not satisfactory for the school's planned future. For all the controversy, there can't be much question about that.

Who was right and who was wrong likely will be debated about a year hence, a few days before the May primary. Already there are interesting signs. Hatfield said maybe a governor's task force should determine the best use of the property, and the governor says that's a great idea, why don't you head it?

Hatfield says fine, if you give me the resources.

Wyatt, who is trying to stay out of that one, said he didn't blame USIU for pulling out. He will work closely with the local committee in its new efforts, he said.

Wyatt was disappointed, in part, because he witnessed the desperation in Astoria when it was trying to find a purpose for Tongue Point. Oregon, for having so few military installations, has an awful time finding new uses for them, once abandoned.

Hatfield, McCall and Wyatt each stand willing to help with the task at Camp Adair. Now is the time to do it — more carefully, perhaps—and to do it together.

Tongue Point Job Corps Director To Visit Here

A closer look at life in the women's Job Corps training program will be offered interested persons in the Aberdeen area when Dr. Dorothy Burns, director of the Job Corps Center of Women at Tongue Point, Oregon, speaks here May 7.

Dr. Burns will be accompanied by several corps women from the Tongue Point center, near Astoria. They will describe the work of the Corps in providing training for specific jobs to young women who are unable to find jobs because of lack of training, and also will tell of day-to-day life and activities at the center.

The program will begin at 2:45 p.m. Friday, May 7, in the Bishop Room of the National Bank of Commerce building. Coffee and tea will be served and all interested persons are invited. Dr. Burns' appearance has been arranged by Mrs. Helge Erickson and Mrs. Aaron Wise, Grays Harbor co-chairman for Women in Community Service. They may be called for further information.

Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women occupies the 781-acre site of the former Tongue Point Naval Air Station, located on the Columbia River three miles east of Astoria, Ore., 15 miles from the Pacific Ocean. It uses the hangars, dormitories and other permanent buildings which were constructed for the Navy and have been converted to classrooms, residence halls and such facilities for Job Corps.

Each new Tongue Point trainee is assigned to a room in one of five residence halls. She will have two to three roommates, except in one residence where six corps-women occupy each individual complete apartments.

Meals are served cafeteria style, at tables seating 6 to 8 persons. There is a dispensary with all necessary medical service, a doctor, three RN's and three LRN's. Dental attention also will be provided.

A new arrival at Tongue Point will spend the first two weeks getting acquainted with the Center, its program, the staff and other corpswomen. She will have a "Big Sister" to help her get settled in her room, explain Center customs and regulations and guide her through such things as getting her clothing issue and first paycheck.

She will have an opportunity to look over the vocational courses and decide which she would prefer, and her counselor will help her draw up her class schedule.

Dozens of vocational programs are offered in business-clerical, electronics assembly, health occupations, drafting, and food and housekeeping service occupations.

For example, in the business-clerical program, a young woman may take training to become a general clerk, a clerk-typist, a stenographer, a filing clerk and record keeper, a business machine operator, key punch operator, to name a few.

To join Job Corps a girl must be at least 16 years old, but not yet 22 years old. Job Corps will help her find a job after she finishes her training.

Job Corps Program Placement High

By JEANNE DeVORE
Of The Daily Astorian

A job placement and retention of 96 per cent was cited, by the Tongue Point Job Corps director, for graduates of the center who have enrolled in the JCYW (Job Corps - YWCA) program. Director Dr. Dorothy Burns said the high rate of placement was a direct and "very favorable" reflection of the effectiveness of the JCYW program.

Of corpswomen who had taken training at the center from less than 180 days but more than 90 days a job placement rate of 83 per cent was shown. For those training less than 90 days a rate of 85 per cent was shown. Dr. Burns said the study was not made by Tongue Point but by another segment of the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

The figures compiled were for a period from August, 1970, to February, 1971, and Dr. Burns said Tongue Point graduates were introduced to the JCYW program in mid-August last year. The percentages per based on follow-up data on 558 girls.

In her monthly report delivered at the Community Relations Council meeting Tuesday evening, Dr. Burns explained preliminary plans for changes in administrative structuring made necessary by the non-renewal of the Philco-Ford contract.

Philco-Ford had been a sub-contractor of the University of Oregon handling the education phases of the Tongue Point training center.

Dr. Burns said where there had been four associate directors, Center Life, Basic Education, Vocational Education and Health Services, there would not be three associate directors, combining the basic and vocational in the office of Associate Director of Education. Under the director of education will be an assistant director of Education and a placement manager.

Currently Vocational Education Associate Director Don Sell, has also been handling placement. Bill Hawks is currently Basic Education Associate Director. Dr. Burns said the new position has not yet been filled and in all fairness the three jobs would be open to applications both by those currently employed at the center and by others.

Preceding reports of activities in the four residences on the center, Dr. Burns gave special recognition to senior resident advisor Wynona Barrett residenceone, for her efforts in coordinating an Afro Fashion show by the corpswomen. Dr. Burns also commended the First Baptist Church congregation for their turn-out at the recent Pie Thing, attended by corpswomen and Tongue Point staff.

In discussing new directions for the Council, President Mrs. Helmer Lindstrom said the group would be changing from monthly to quarterly meetings to be held in the first ten days of September, December, March and June. The Council is planning to establish a Corpswomen Shopping Service, a co-operative working force of corpswomen and Astoria area clothing merchants.

Earns Job Corps certificate

Angie A. Altman, daughter of Velda Worland, 1958 Van Wyck Road, has received a general educational development certificate from Tongue Point Women's Job Corps Center near Astoria.

She was selected from Tongue Point to compete in a national Job Corps talent contest, with winner to be announced. She sang "Michael Row the Boat Ashore."

Agreement By City Council Marks Beginning For Sewer

The Woodburn City Council Tuesday night, June 15, set the machinery in operation for the new Woodburn-MacLaren School sewage treatment facility when approval was given to an agreement with the State of Oregon, through its Corrections Division, for construction of the project which will cost some $374,450.

Voters of Woodburn recently approved a $240,000 bond issue to finance the city's share of the facility, which will be located on property near MacLaren School for Boys, to be leased from the state.

Federal or state funds will also be used in financing the sewage plant.

The council also authorized the city engineers to proceed with necessary engineering for the interim facilities, which will serve until the North Marion Sewage Corridor is established and then become part of the project.

In other business the council unanimously passed ordinances authorizing acquisition of off-street parking facilities and also to make necessary improvements to the parking lot on First street. The city manager and his staff will work out the assessment schedule.

An ordinance was passed for planned unit development, but no action was taken on the Uniform Zone Code as prepared by the Planning Commission until councilmen give the document some study.

A revised agreement with the state highway department and the Southern Pacific for realignment of Garfield street and installation of cross arms, signals and lights at the Young street railroad crossing was approved. Work on the project is due to start, probably this month, after the railroad firm moves its tracks. The Bradley street crossing will be closed under the agreement.

The council granted the downtown merchants' committee, headed by Ralph Pickering, to block Grant street from Front to First street from June 24 to 27 during the annual Crazy Days campaign. The Kiwanis club also will be permitted to set up a trailer in this vicinity.

Request of City Recorder Barney Burris to write off uncollected water and sewer bills back to from 1964 to the date that Ordinance No. 1218 was passed in 1969, was approved by the council. The recorder has compiled the complete list of unpaid bills to a collection agency. The present ordinance makes the property owner responsible for unpaid water and sewer bills and can be placed as a lien against the property.

Mayor Walter Lawson appointed Robert Bullard, Robert Engle, Al Ringo and Mrs. Mildred Hatch to the Redevelopment committee. The fifth member will come from the Mexican-American residents of Woodburn, the mayor indicated.

Job Corps Employes Number 277

In Tuesday's article on the Job Corps Center contract, the employment figures were incorrectly stated. Tongue Point employs 277 individuals now, and under terms of the new contract, that will be dropped to some 250.

The initial phase of the two-year contract will run for 11 months with an allocation of $5332 per girl for 730 girls. Dr. Burns said the total center contract for 11 months (August through next June) is $3,567,993.

Dr. Burns indicated that Tongue Point received more funds than the other Job Corps centers because of the local center's high operating costs, which run $800,000 for maintenance, fire, security and safety.

R. Greene, Job Corps Graduate

Miss Rita Greene, 18, daughter of Mrs. Vera Lockhart, of W. 88th St., graduated recently from the Tongue Point Women's Job Corps Center in Astoria, Ore., after completing a course in Nurses Aide. Miss Greene will transfer to San Francisco where the Job Corps provides on-the-job training through a contract with the JCYW.

She has been a trainee at the Astoria Center since Nov. 10 1970. Tongue Point is operated by the University of Oregon under a contract with the Manpower Administration of the U.S. Department of Labor, with the Philco-Ford Corp. presenting vocational training as a sub-contractor. There is a current enrollment of 730.

In addition to job-skill training, the Job Corps program includes remedial education and personality development and is available to disadvantaged young women between the ages of 16 and 21.

Unemployed?

Job Corps trains youth

Job Corps, a program of the U.S. Department of Labor, offers to train and obtain jobs for young men and women 16 to 20 years old who are out of school and unemployed, according to Curtis Stephens, recruiter, 4710 S. Broadway.

Job Corps Centers for young men are in Arizona, Oregon, Utah, Idaho, and Washington. For young women there are 2 centers, in Los Angeles, and Tongue Point, Oregon. Transportation cost is paid. At the centers enrollees receive food, medical and dental care, new clothes, spending money. If a young man has dependents, Job Corps will send some support money.

What job training is available? Training is for clerical, work, food service, hospital work, forestry skills, bricklaying, carpentry, auto mechanics, heavy equipment operation and repair, and others.

To learn a skill takes from 6 months to 2 years, depending on the skill. After the skill is learned Job Corps helps find a job.

Gas Station Operators Complain

Job Corps Tries to Alleviate Visitor Problems

City Manager Dale Curry of Astoria says he's talked to the director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center about reported trouble in town from young men visiting corpswomen on weekends.

Two gas station operators — Dick Dybvik and Clarence Singleton — told the City Council this week that youths from Ft. Lewis and elsewhere had caused some damage and general interference at their businesses recently. They said police had helped out, but said the situation needed greater action.

Curry said Wednesday he had talked to Tongue Point director Dr. Dorothy Burns and said Dr. Burns said steps would be taken in an attempt to alleviate the situation.

Job Corps Contract

Even though the Tongue Point Job Corps Center's 1971-72 contract requires cutting 25 of the center's 275-member staff, it appears Tongue Point came off as well as the other Job Corps centers.

Dr. Dorothy Burns said negotiations with the Labor Department in Washington, D.C., resulted in a boost of just $28,000 from the current budget (money that wouldn't begin to cover even employe pay raises).

The Job Corps is not one of President Nixon's loves, which could explain the tight-pursestrings approach to the program. But such a program also has waste, and efforts are apparently being made to eliminate some of the excesses. For example, Dr. Burns said Labor officials spoke of the necessity of reducing the tremendous costs of maintenance at Tongue Point together with a study of how to improve building use. The facilities at Tongue Point were built to house a Navy base, so it's not surprising to have inefficiency when an educational program is put there, instead.

The impact of the Job Corps Center on Astoria and Clatsop County is seen in the budget figure for the next fiscal year—$3.5 million, most of which is spent here.

Dr. Burns to Meet On Job Corps Funds

Tongue Point Job Corps Director Dr. Dorothy Burns will be in Washington, D.C., this week discussing with the Dept. of Labor officials realignment of program spending at the center.

Dr. Burns, accompanied by University of Oregon's Robert Gilbert, dean of education; Ray Hawk, dean of administration, and W. N. McLaughlin, business manager, will spend the two days in conferences to establish program spending levels in regard to the entire Tongue Point training program.

She said upon their return, they will then begin preparing a budget for approval of the Dept. of Labor.

According to Dr. Burns, the center is currently operating on a budget of $5,294 per corpswoman per 12-month year. The recommendation of the Dept. of Labor for the coming year is an operating budget based on $5,300 per corpswoman per year.

Tongue Point, like many other education facilities, is faced with increasing costs in utilities and food as well as a mandatory increase in cost of living allowance for personnel.

Dr. Burns indicated she anticipated the delegation from Tongue Point would be discussing "many, many things" with Washington officials. They will be leaving Wednesday for the Capital.

Dr. Burns has always wanted to be a teacher

Director of a U.S. Dept. of Labor Job Corps Center, overseeing the lives and schooling of more than 700 individuals and a staff of a little less than half that many — that's a position over which many rs would stick their eir cartridge belts g to that position happen. For Dr. ns, Tongue Point irector it took long tudying, gaining nd working.

ice McArtor Burns, ner by birth, was City, Ind., a town in il Indiana, and according to Dr. Burns "is practically nonexistent".

Her high school years and early college years were spent in Washington, D.C., where her father had accepted a position with the Roosevelt administration as chairman of a Treasury Dept. a division whose purpose it was to enroll and disbar government attorneys.

Long before her high school days, Miss McArtor had decided to be a teacher, "I very much wanted to be a teacher," and recalls a comment of her father's to the effect that it was very good to be a teacher. During her schoolhood days, she frequently had occasion to work with little children and says "I felt I could be a very good teacher".

She admits to being "somewhat mischievous" during high school and even in the first few terms of college. In high school she was active on a softball team and initiated an idea that girls should be allowed to play intramural games. She says her school principal vetoed the idea explaining he took rather "a dim view of girl's PE".

Her degree of success in high school "depended largely on the teacher . . . ." if she got along with the instructor then her grades were usually "very good", if not, then they were "very bad".

It was Wilson's Teachers College, Washington, D.C., after high school graduation. Dr. Burns says, at that time the school was city-supported and was one of the best instructional institutions anywhere, offering an extensive cultural program and renowned speakers, usually from the embassies, who frequently addressed the student body. "It was the kind of college where you weren't taught about the Library of Congress, you were taken there."

"It took me about a year to set my pace," she says of her initial college experiences but after the first two or three terms she was establishing a "very good record". She graduated with distinction and was invited to join Phi Beta Kappa, the national intercollegiate honorary society with a membership based on high academic standing.

From Wilson, her academic pursuits took her to Indiana State Teachers College, Terre Haute, Ind., (now Indiana State University). Receiving a baccalaureate degree with majors in English and Latin, she moved on to Fisher, Ill., to a teaching position in a high school there where she "took on a little of everything" in the scope of subjects taught.

Acquiring a full scholarship at the University of Illinois, Champaign, Ill., through Pratt-Whitney aircraft engine company, she resumed studies in English and expanded into the field of of science. It was during the span of this two-year scholarship that Dr. Burns "earned more money going to school than teaching." She was one of 25 to be selected as a recipient of the scholarship.

It was at the U of I that she went to school day and night and on weekends taking courses in mechanical engineering, math and physical science.

It was towards the end of World War II that she graduated from the U of I and then went to work for Pratt-Whitney for a short period "doing chemical and physical analysis of parts that had failed in engines being used in the service during the last part of the war."

Admitting to feeling terrible pressure in a field she was not particularly fond of, she says she knew she had to either go back to school and specialize to get what she needed for a MA degree or go into teaching. She gave notice at Pratt-Whitney and set out for California to enroll in school.

With the war having just ended, servicemen had priority on all transportation facilities. That, coupled with snow extended the duration of her cross-country trip to a week. On the last leg of her transfer, she arrived in San Francisco by train and says, "My first sight of California was warmth, flowers and sunshine."

She enrolled in the University of California, Berkeley, taking up residence in Oakland. After "not too long a time" she began "tackling" placement probes, a standard procedure for someone seeking to acquire a teaching assignment.

It was during this stint in California that she met and married Robert Burns.

How did she meet her husband? Resembling a plot of a Hollywood script . . . she fainted. Not resembling the Hollywood themes . . . upon fainting she fell into the steam table of a neighborhood eatery.

As Dr. Burns tells it, she and her yet unknown intended often ate at a little restaurant not too far from their respective apartments. One day, after hibernating in her apartment for two days battling a flu bug ventured out to the cafe for sustenance. The name of the cafe she recalls was "Hoppe's".

She says she remembers having seen her rescuer in the restaurant on previous occasions and did not know him until after he lifted her from the midst of the steam table, he properly introduced himself. The rest reads like a story tale.

Bob Burns, with an intriguing twinkle in his Sir Galahad eyes, says "she is a very fascinating woman", and with a contented but mischievous smile adds, "some day I must tell you about her."

Midst shades of nostalgia, Mrs. Burns relates the circumstances of early days of their marriage. After living for a year in a one-room apartment "we convinced a man we'd like to rent a little house which he considered unsafe". She says at that time, following the war, apartments were nearly non-existent and those people with children practically had to hide them to keep rental property.

"We paid $15 a month for rent, tacked metal over the holes in the floor and redecorated to make a Hawaiian hut."

While visiting friends in Mexico in 1948 their daughter, Mariana Molina Xochitl Burns, arrived ahead of schedule. She now has dual citizenship. Their son Robert McArtor Burns was born in San Diego in 1958.

While in San Diego area, Burns owned and operated a tropical plant and landscaping business and Dr. Burns completed work on her masters degree working in local high schools as teacher, counselor and vice-principal.

In 1962 she received a fellowship to University of Oregon through Delta Kappa Gamma. Then back to California for a three year stretch at Cabrillo College at Aptos where she was chairman of the college scholarship program, counselor, and English instructor.

Being well-known at the U of O where she was teaching fellow and supervisor of student teachers in the College Education, when the position of director for Tongue Point came open, she was contacted. She is now in her fourth year as director and says of her professional experiences. "In my life it is the most challenging and probably the most interesting, and I am encouraged by the way we are supported so very generously by the people in the community."

Job Corps Housekeeping Program Termed Success

Astoria, Oregon
Daily Astorian
(Cir. D. 7,736)
MAR 2 9 1971
Allen's P.C.B. Est. 1888

The director of the executive housekeeping program at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center says that despite criticism of that program it has had good success in placing corpswomen in well-paying jobs.

Bud Gavino, director of the program, told Astoria Chamber of Commerce members Friday that only the business-secretarial program places more Tongue Point girls in jobs and at somewhat higher pay. He said some 82 per cent of those completing the housekeeping training have been placed in jobs, and at pay of more than $2 per hour. Of the $2 per hour, he said it may not sound like much, but it is for young persons who aren't used to making money.

Gavino's program, which Tongue Point Director Dr. Dorothy Burns says is one of the most popular on the Center, instructs in the cleaning and care of the interiors of office buildings, hospitals, hotels, motels and other facilities. An executive housekeeper in, for example, a large hospital, supervises a staff of persons in cleaning and maintenance of the building.

Gavino said some blacks don't like the program, apparently because cleaning and maintenance work is often thought to be a menial work. He said, though, that the value of a single motel unit, for example, ranges from $16,000 to $20,000, so the degree of responsibility is high.

Some 165 young women are in the Tongue Point program. It includes an average of eight or nine months training at the center, after which the corpswomen take trial housekeeping jobs in a city in a joint program with the YWCA.

Gavino said girls in the program are required to work for their high school graduation-equivalency certificates and to take a variety of courses at the Center.

Young women entering the program have as low a reading capability as the second and third grades, Gavino said. He said most advance quickly in their academic subjects.

The trainees do much of their housekeeping work in two motel units at the center. The walls of the units are of varying materials, which gives a chance to work with various chemicals and materials on them. Handling of chemicals is the hardest part of the training, Gavino said.

The program gives n readers and others who behind in their acade training "something else to do other than be a drain on society," said Gavino.

Tennessee corpswoman, outstanding at training center

Lillian instructed by Tricia Gavino

There are more than 700 of them — corpswomen at Tongue Point. Most of them are black. Many are high school drop-outs. Some do great at the training center, and some don't. Many are able to adjust to new surroundings, and some can't. They come from all over the United States with most of them from the Southeastern states.

Lillian Martin, 18, from Humboldt, Tenn., is both typical and outstanding as a corpswoman. She has been at TP (as most of the girls refer to the center) since April 29, 1970, and since then has completed training in the field of health occupations (which qualifies her for nurses' aide positions) and is currently studying the business-clerical course which she expects to complete in June.

Miss Martin is similar to all of the girls at TP in that she too suffered for several weeks from homesickness and wanted to go home. But, like a large percentage of the recruits, she stuck it out and is looking forward now to securing a job in a field she "really likes": office work.

Lillian graduated in the top ten of her class from a high school with an enrollment of more than 900 students. Her reason for signing up for Job Corps: "no jobs, except factory".

She was number five in a family of 14 children, her father was deceased, and nine of the children are still at home.

When she arrived at TP she found things pretty much as she had been told to expect, except for the weather . . . it was worse than she expected. After spending a couple months working off the homesickness with learning to roller skate and hours of reading she began getting involved in various activities and projects.

Currently she has a lead part in the drama class' "Raisin in the Sun" and is rehearsing a part in "Pearly". Reflections on her involvement include having been selected Corpswoman of the Month in August 1970, being a reporter for student government at the center, an area leader for her residence (Residence One), and also holder of the Miss Harper Hall title. The Harper Hall title, she says, is based mostly on personality and "how well you get along with the other girls".

She has been on the honor roll all but three months since being at the center and has not missed a single day of class except for days when the drama group made trips to out-of-town schools to present performances. Her center life evaluation (residence and outside-class time) has rated as high as 4.5 on a scale of 5. In her other segments of grading at the center, on classroom courses are: 5. for social problems; 4.6 for marriage and family; and 3.8 for math ("I was always low in math.")

Lillian, gracious as a young lady with a boarding school background, is quiet but not bashful. When asked for an opinion, she gives a moment of thought and then with an air of diliberateness concisely delivers her ideas.

A pretty woman, presenting the appearance of having long given up the ways of little girls, she is meticulous in her personal appearance and carries herself with poise. She speaks clearly and, having been out of her native South for several months now has only a hint of an accent.

Lillian speaks highly of the staff at the center saying, "some are genuinely concerned." She suggests that the vo-ed group discussions should touch on other than class life, such as everyday life in general, and recommends that an occasional all-round gripe session at the center would do much to help both the girls and staff attain what they are "all there for: to talk helps more than to grumble."

When she finishes her business-clerical at TP she hopes to attend the University of Oregon, taking courses in sociology, English composition, math and probably algebra to determine possibilities for further education.

After that? She hopes ultimately to get a "very good" office job and possibly become a business and clerical teacher in the high school level.

Go back to Tennessee? "To visit but not to stay", she says. Lillian says most of the girls from the South don't want to go back there but "the California girls do."

The last time she was home, on leave in October, she recalls the town looked different, new buildings "and people were different."

"But they said I was the one who had changed."

'Superstar' Repeats Saturday

Nearly 400 persons attended a visual-audio presentation of "Jesus Christ Superstar" at Star of the Sea Auditorium Wednesday evening.

The showing of various portions of films and slides, interspersed with brief, modern-dance interpretations by Annette Cameron, Marilyn Ward and Vickie Berger, was backed with portions of the sound track from "Jesus Christ Superstar".

The small auditorium was filled to capacity with an audience that sat or knelt on the floor, on the stage and stood.

Four film projectors, one slide projector and special effects were coordinated by Steve and Sandy Philps, Sister Barbara Bray, Kathy Sinclair, Tom Bugas and Paul Wallace. The entire production was under the direction of Father Wilfred Wyffels of St. Mary Church.

"Oh Happy Day" by the Starlighters of Tongue Point Job Corps Center provided the finale of the 55 minute presentation.

Following numerous requests, Father Wyffels has consented to again present the "stimulation" to the public at 7:30 p.m., Saturday in the Star of the Sea auditorium. A special showing is also slated for Friday afternoon at Tongue Point for the corpswomen.

Tongue Point basketball team plays as family

Eagles show a little hustle

Team spirit is expected in competition basketball but when family spirit invades the court some heart-rending sensations are created . . . especially in the face of defeat.

The girl's basketball team from Tongue Point Job Corps Center recently took on the Knappa High School girls' team. Beaten, and badly at that, the point score of the game was actually of little consequence. It was watching the girls learning to move together as a team for a common purpose. At one point in the game, the TP coach (physical education instructor Billie Reid) said, "Are you playing man to man or zone to zone? I really can't tell what you're doing. Remember girls this is a team so it's high time you played like a team."

It was like a dawning among the girls. From then on the shouted encourgements from the benched members of the team as well as the efforts of the TP cheerleaders were like family trading rather than the normal player to player banter and for all appearances the girls seemed to begin pulling together.

Fighting for every point and submitting to sheepish grins if they fouled, the girls finally went down in something less than glorious defeat. They lost their game but not their spirit and shenanigans in the gym continued for some 20 minutes after the game.

Lincoln Tintype Discovered

A tintype of Abraham Lincoln that may have a historical value of $100,000 has come to light accidentally in a trunk of antique collections given by a friend 14 years ago to Mr. and Mrs. Loren G. Hobson, who raise pigs and cattle in the Pine Creek area near Baker. Knowledgeable people who have examined the tintype say it appears to be an original and shows Lincoln in a pose and appearance similar to that on the $5 bill . . . Five girls at the Tongue Point Job Corps, ranging in age from 17 to 20, compete Friday night for the title of Miss Tongue Point. Area women resume educational process

"All you have to do is have to" agree six women, somewhat past the teenybopper age who are returning to school, some after an absence of several years. The sextet got together recently to discuss and reveal their reasons for, problems with, and lessons learned from . . . turning to college.

The women, all students at Clatsop College, range in age from mid-30s to late 50s and among them have a total of 20 children. Running strong among the reasons for taking up with studies, again, was divorce. Five of the six are divorced: anywhere from six months to 16 years, and more than one of them had been married for more than 20 years.

The women: Loretta Oakley, Astoria, librarian at the Astor Library; Ruth Colvin, rural Astoria, wife of a dairy rancher and until recently a part-time employe at the Red Cross office; Ina Barton, Hammond, an accountant at Tongue Point Job Corps Center; June Gillette, Astoria, student and part-time cafeteria employe at CCC; Betty Rhodes, Seaside, a former cook for 30 years and now supposedly totally disabled; and Marjorie Classen, Astoria, works nights at Tongue Point and at an Astoria restaurant.

At the outset of the group interview, one of the first women responding mentioned her divorce and quickly added, "please don't mention anything about the divorce bit" but tone on that point changed rapidly when the marital status question rounded the group and proved a tally of five out of six now among the single. This note raised a sense of camaraderie among the individuals and they seemed to sense that each of the others was able to understand the reasons for an apprehensions of resuming an education.

Establishing a common denominator, the women didn't seem to mind divulging their reasons for enrolling at the school and the large percentage said their purpose was "now I had to make a living for my family." Mrs. Colvin, the lone Mrs. in the group, said she started classes for something interesting to do. She had been a teacher aide prior to enrolling and now aims to become an elementary teacher.

'like a habit'

All but one of the divorcees started classes after their divorces. Ina says, "I've never stopped (going to school)", and admitted that going to school was almost "habit forming". She is studying business education and music for dual purposes: first to improve in her current field as an accountant and secondly to eventually become a secondary school music teacher.

When members of the group balked at discussing their academic achievements at the junior college, Vera Gault, dean of student affairs, counselor and instructor at the college, quietly submitted, "I might add that all of these women are in the top sections of their class." From there they began talking grades and grade point averages like 19-year-old coeds.

'23 now 20 later'

Marjorie is taking 23 credit hours this term, plans to take 20 next term with the intention of completing two years of study in a year and a half. She also works seven nights a week. Her intentions are to enter nursing.

'4 hours sleep'

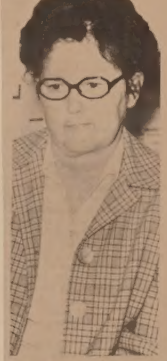
Realization of the heavy study load, and heavy work load several of the women are carrying, brought up the question of sleep or lack of it. Loretta sighed, and in an even-toned Southern accent said, "I get about four hours a night, for as long as I can. Then comes one of those nights when you just can't go any more and clunk." She and the others said it was nights like those when they would sleep for about 13 hours.

What keeps them going? A myriad of things.

'I know I will'

Betty, who had been a cook for 30 years, has had three operations on her back, one on her knee and one on her foot. She is legally, totally disabled. "They say I'm totally disabled and I won't be able to work and I think I will." After a thoughtful pause and with a definite note of determination she added, "I know I will." She wants to learn a business skill, a job where she won't have to be on her feet near as much as when she was cooking.

Each of the six were also in agreement that if they hadn't been able to count on their children either for assistance with duties at home or encouragement things would have been a lot tougher.



'one more year'

June has one more year at Clatsop to attain a two-year associate degree after which she will transfer to work towards a degree in teaching elementary education.

'it's like food'

In discussing separate courses, some of the women admitted to not caring for some but Ruth wrapped up that question and the general attitude of them all with "it's like food you eat . . . some you need."

At Job Corps Center

Philco-Ford Drops Contract

The non-renewal of Philco-Ford's sub-contract with the University of Oregon in the operation of Tongue Point Job Corps center has been announced by Tongue Point director Dr. Dorothy Burns.

Dr. Burns relayed the information Tuesday during a Community Relations Council meeting. It was contained in a letter, dated March 30, from the office of University of Oregon President Robert Clark, stating the contract would not be renewed.

Philco-Ford conducts the vocational phase of training at the center and has since the Job Corps Center opened some six years ago, first as a men's center and later as a women's center.

In preceding the announcement Dr. Burns told the Council members in attendance that she had a "sad" announcement to make. She said Philco-Ford "has an excellent record" but the non-renewal stemmed from a problem of money. She stressed that the vocational training would not be dropped but would be assumed by the University of Oregon.

The University of Oregon's own contract with the U.S. Dept. of Labor has been renewed and the center has been instructed to begin preparing budget proposals for negotiations sometime in mid or late May. Philco-Ford was a sub-contractor of the U of O which is considered as the prime contractor. The U of O's new contract will be on a 23-month basis. Previously held was a 12-month contract.

The Tongue Point director said Tongue Point had been requested by the Dept. of Labor Manpower Division to increase the number of staff members within the residential program and that probably funds derived from not renewing the Philco-Ford contract would be used to this end. Approximately 28 persons are working currently in conjunction with the Philco-Ford program and Dr. Burns said, "We hope most will stay with us," but cited tenure of some as probable cause why they might choose to stay with the corporation.

The decision not to renew the company's contract was based on increasing costs in numerous segments of the Job Corps operation. Dr. Burns mentioned the current increase in cost of utilities had necessitated shifting of funds to cover expenses at the center.

Tongue Point is a women's training center with a capacity of 720 resident students. Training is in the fields of basic education and vocational education. The basic education is under the direction of the U of O which will now be assuming the vocational education phase as well.

Dr. Burns could not give a dollar estimate on the changes the non-renewal would bring and said that any estimate given before rough drafts of budgets are made next week "could be off as much as $10,000 to $15,000."

Needs Help

Verna Christensen, a 16-year-old Warrenton High School girl, was seriously hurt when she, as a passenger, was involved in an auto accident on Friday, March 12. She is now in Providence Hospital in Portland and will be for several months with a severed spine which will leave her paralyzed from the waist down.

Since there is inadequate insurance to cover this accident a large percentage of the expense of hospital, doctor, later, therapy, etc. will fall on the family.

THIS FAMILY NEEDS HELP!

The mother, Rose Christensen, is physically unable to work and has one son who is a freshman in college and three children at home (ages 6, 8, and 9). The maternal grandmother, Verna Christensen, is caring for the three younger children in addition to holding down a full-time position as a resident advisor at Tongue Point Job Corps Center to make it possible for the mother to remain at her daughter's bedside. This arrangement is necessary because there are no funds to pay for a baby-sitter.

Although I do not know this family personally, other than the grandmother, I feel we should all be concerned over their tragedy. We should realize we could possibly find ourselves in a similar situation and if we're not willing to help our neighbors in their hour of need from whom could we except help if needed.

As one individual who wishes to help I cannot do a great deal alone but if I can find others feeling the same way I do we could possibly raise enough funds to make a small dent in these expenses. If we could receive enough donations of odds and ends we could have a rummage sale and if we could receive donations of baked foods we could have a bake sale. Of course cash donations would also be accepted.

Anyone willing to help in any way, donations or ideas of fund raising projects please contact Betty Wingenbach, 325-6063, after 5 p.m. or drop a note to me.

Vocational Training To Be Continued

The Nixon administration's economy ax has cut off the Philco-Ford corporation from supplying 28 teachers for the vocational education program at the Tongue Point Job Corps center. That firm, which had a subcontract under the University of Oregon, the educational boss at the center, was judged to ask too much.

No figures were made public when the axing was regretfully disclosed. Philco-Ford has served since the center was established and has been praised by students and supervisors.

The vocational program is to be assumed under the university's supervision. It has charge of general education at the center. At least as much funds as were provided for the past year may be available.

The university has signed a two-year contract for educational bossing at the center. Its previous contracts have been for one year. That extra year reassures those who fear that the economy ax might fall on the local center's neck.

Mrs. May Kasahara, a clerk employed by the Public Welfare Division in Portland, was selected from among nine finalists as Oregon's State Employe of the Year for 1970 at OSEA's annual awards banquet in Salem recently.

All of the finalists had earlier been selected to represent OSEA's nine districts as District Employes of the Year. They were chosen from among 35 state employes nominated by OSEA's 80 local chapters throughout the state.

Each was honored as an "individual whose attitude, ability and dedication to his job and contributions to his community reflect with great favor upon state service as a career and the state employe as a good citizen."

Mrs. Kasahara's award was presented by Sen. Wallace P. Carson, Jr. (R-Salem), a two-term member of the Oregon House of Representatives who was elected to the Senate last year. The district awards were presented by OSEA President Chalmers Jones. Awards were presented to the following employes:

DISTRICT ONE

Mrs. May Kasahara was named recipient of the District One plaque as well as the State Employe of the Year award. She is a clerk 4 in the Public Welfare Division's Multnomah County office.

Carson praised Mrs. Kasahara as a "quiet woman who is efficient and competent, interested in her work and loyal to her employer. She exemplifies the best attributes that can be found in any employe. I'm proud that she works for the State of Oregon."

Away from her job she is active in the Oregon Buddhist Church along with her husband, George, and their daughter, Charlotte. She was nominated by OSEA's Public Welfare Chapter 31 in Portland.

DISTRICT TWO

Neil A. Amerman, director of housing and food services at Oregon College of Education, was named recipient of the District Two award.

"Amerman does an outstanding job of managing the college dormitories. The best evidence of that is the fact that dormitory and food charges are $75 a year lower at OCE than at the other colleges in the state system," Jones said.

Amerman, who is active in the Boy Scouts of America in his spare time, was nominated by OSEA's OCE Chapter 43 in Monmouth.

DISTRICT THREE

Mrs. Maxine M. Colwell was selected as recipient of the District Three award. She is an administrative assistant in charge of purchasing and payments at Southern Oregon College.

"Maxine Colwell considers her position as a state employe one of the most important aspects of her busy life. She exhibits consistently cooperative and pleasant attitude toward her job and her co-workers," Jones said.

She is active in the First United Methodist Church and was nominated by OSEA's Siskiyou Chapter 84 in Ashland.

DISTRICT FOUR

Mrs. Jenes E. Moty, secretary to the Dean of Faculty at Oregon Technical Institute, was chosen recipient of the District Four award.

"In addition to responsibility for instructional steno pools," Jones said, "she also provides help and information for work-study personnel—and that's done on her own time and initiative." He called her one of the most "efficient, considerate employes in the System of Higher Education."

Mrs. Moty is active in a host of community activities, including service as president of the Klamath Falls City Council. She was nominated by OTI Chapter 36 and OTI Faculty Chapter 75.

DISTRICT FIVE

Bill G. Cogswell was named recipient of the District Five award. He is employed by the Board of Parole and Probation.

"Bill Cogswell makes daily judgments that seriously affect the lives of 50 persons who have been convicted of crimes against socley. His enthusiasm for his work and his knowledge of people are obvious, and are one reason why he has been promoted over more experience employes," Jones said.

Cogswell is active in the Umatilla County Credit Union and was nominated by OSEA's Blue Mountain Chapter 94.

DISTRICT SIX

Mrs. Florence Ramsey, a domestic worker at the University of Oregon, was named recipient of the District Five award.

She was praised by Jones for her work with retarded children of the Springfield School District. "She teaches them courtesy and good manners, how to hold their heads erect and to become self-assured individuals. She has trained handicapped youngsters to take their place in society," Jones said.

Mrs. Ramsey was nominated for the award by OSEA's Webfoot Chapter 49 in Eugene.

DISTRICT SEVEN

Earl G. Warzynski was named recipient of the District Seven award. He is an electrician at Columbia Park Hospital and Training Center.

"He is a prompt, dependable, faithful worker. He is conscientious in every job put before him, large or small. He attempts to do all that is asked of him and to do it well. He attended training sessions for ten weeks on is own time to improve his skills and efficiency," Jones said.

Warzynski was nominated for the District Seven award by OSEA's Oregon Trail Chapter 35 in The Dalles.

DISTRICT EIGHT

James D. Williams, who is a resident supervisor at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, was selected recipient of the District Eight award.

"Williams has demonstrated outstanding competency in an emotionally taxing situation as supervisor of a residential program which houses more than 250 young women from varied socio-economic backgrounds. He has consistently had the ability to understand the problems confronting young women with extreme variances in educational ability, social backgrounds as well as the ethnic cultures involved," Jones said.

He is active in his church and several community organizations. He was nominated by OSEA's Lower Columbia Chapter 99 in Astoria.

DISTRICT NINE

Mrs. Gloria M. Sanders was chosen recipient of the District Nine award. She is a clerk 3 at the Oregon State Hospital.

"She has helped many patients with personal problems as well as guiding them through proper channels to gain employment," Jones said. "Often in her spare time she helps to entertain patients on special occasions, returning to the hospital and offering her help whenever needed. She personally visits live-in homes or nursing homes where she knows patients will be sent upon leaving the hospital."

Mrs. Sanders was nominated for the award by OSEA's Evergreen Chapter 28 in Salem

Rhonda Morrell, 'Miss Tongue Point'

Rhonda Morrell, Laurel, Miss., was named Miss Tongue Point during ceremonies at the Job Corps Center, Friday night.

First runner-up was Betty White, Residence Two, from New Orleans, La.; second runner-up was Katie Reed, Residence Five, Greenville, Miss.; third runner-up Frances McGruder, Residence Three, Yazoo City, Miss.; and fourth runner-up Sarah Chislum, Residence Four, Chicago.

Astoria Reserve Fleet Basin Lease Up for Renewal in April

The Ports of Astoria and Portland must decide by mid-April if they are going to purchase or renew their lease on the Astoria Reserve Fleet Basin east of Tongue Point, according to C.E. "Ted" Hodges, Port of Astoria manager.

Hodges told the Astoria Kiwanis Club Tuesday that the two ports jointly leased the basin from the Federal Maritime Administration in 1967 to maintain the area for potential use for maritime oriented facilities, such as lash ships (ships which carry loaded barges).

Hodges said Bill Dirken of the Port of Portland is in San Francisco discussing the basin with the Maritime Administration. He said the facility is costing the Port of Astoria $4,000 a year.

"I don't know what we need it for right now," Hodges told the Kiwanians. He said it may be valuable for future use.

Hodges said they could possibly develop the basin if they could also obtain use of Tongue Point, but didn't know what they could do at Tongue Point as long as the women's Job Corps is located there.

Contract Is Sought

The director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center and University of Oregon officials will go to Washington, D.C., for a June 10 meeting on a new contract for the Job Corps facility.

Dr. Dorothy Burns and UO officials will confer with officials of the Dept. of Labor on a contract for fiscal 1971-72. The university contracts with the federal government to operate the center.

320 women active in area bowling

The Astoria Woman's Bowling Assn. has a current membership of 320 and the members maintain that bowling is the most popular and fastest growing participation sport in the United States.

The association consists of six women's leagues and six mixed leagues bowled in three establishments: Lower Columbia Bowl, The Elks Bowling Alley, and Tongue Point bowling lanes. The woman's association supervises phases of the American Junior Bowling Congress activities, a program for junior bowlers.

Members contribute to the Bowlers Victory Legion program, a charitable group organized by the Women's International Bowling Congress for aiding hospitalized veterans by supplying recreational equipment to Veterans' Administration Hospitals.

The AWBA participates in the national program for Bowl Down Cancer and this year Mert Hoff, Warrenton, took second place in the state finals, winning a mink stole. The National Tournament is scheduled to be held in Atlanta, Ga., and the State Tournament was in Eugene. Tournaments are held for all groups on city, state and national levels. The AWBA completed their city tournament earlier this month with 38 teams of five women competing in doubles and singles and all-events for the title of Astoria City Tournament Champions.

The association has 12 members belonging to national and state 600 Club. League honors for the 1970-71 season are held by Mert Hoff with a high individual game of 252 and by Juanita Williams for a high series of 632. Record high game score is held by Katherine Polisky, 276; and high series record is held by Verna Efaw with a 653.

Officers in the association are Bertha Hodson, president; Bettie Hansen, first vice president; Katherine Polisky, second vice president; Juanita Williams, secretary-treasurer; and Peggy Petersen, sergeant-at-arms.

The association's awards banquet is set for April 3 at the Moose Lodge to be followed by a dance.

Seven Students to Work, Study At Job Corps Center This Summer

By MAKY HAWORTH
Of The Daily Astorian

University and graduate students will be coming to the Tongue Point Job Corps this summer as the past two summers for work and study programs Director Dr Dorothy Burns made the announcement Tuesday night at the Community Relations Council meeting.

Council meeting.

Seven medical nursing, dental, health administration, and social work students will come to work with the staff for practical experience

A visiting professor of the American Assn of College for Teachers Education will also be at the center for four weeks after June 12, to direct a reading clinic

"We feel it important to have colleges training teachers learn of the problems and needs of the students we serve," commented Dr Burns in her report "He will also be of help to our staff in developing reading programs."

Two summer workshops are being planned in conjunction with the University of Oregon providing there are enough students. One will concern culture and learning, with a seminar on disadvantaged environments and learning problems and practical work supervising teaching disadvantaged youth. The second group will be on culture and personal adjustment with seminar work on adjustment problems of disadvantaged persons and supervised counseling experience

Dr Burns added that there will be 12 student teachers and some student-in-recreation She mentioned that with all these students expected, the community may need to give some help with housing.

As of this week there have been 599 general education degrees granted. Dr Burns estimated that 90 per cent of the women taking the exams pass because they don't take them until they are ready.

Dr Burns will go to Washington, D.C., with a contract for the Job Corps facility for the coming fiscal year Budget funds have been held to the present level so increases will be the focal point of discussions

Dr Burns believes that the Job Corps division of Manpower has been given no more funding over last year and thats the basic cause Prior contract figures were for 730 girls at $5,294 per girl, and for this year the Center has been asked to meet $6,306 per girl.

"Our inflation costs are six to seven per cent a year beyond salaries," she reported. "In one year utility costs went up $50,000, and food costs rose seven to eight cents per girl per day At the University rate the overhead percentage is small, with but a matter of thousands of dollars."

However, Dr. Burns expects no problem about the contract renewal.

Ardis Christensen Takes Education Post at Job Corps

Tongue Point Job Corps Center Director Dr Dorothy Burns, today announced the appointments of Ardis Christensen, 7 Nimitz Drive, Astoria and Dr. Michael Colbert, Corvallis, as associate and assistant directors of education at the center. The positions become effective Aug. 1.

ARDIS CHRISTENSEN
Associate Director

Miss Christensen's role of associate director of education becomes the third highest post at Tongue Point under the center's recent reorganization plan which placed responsibility for the basic and vocational education programs under one individual aegis Formerly, the Philco-Ford Corp. ran the center's vocational program while the academic program was conducted under the auspices of the University of Oregon Dr Satter now sponsors both areas of education

Miss Christensen has been a counselor at Tongue Point's Residence 2 since July 1970. Prior to that she served as principal of the Star of the Sea Elementary School

A native of Monmouth Miss Christensen received her B.S. from Marylhurst College, Portland, and attended Oregon State University and Oregon College of Education before obtaining her masters in education from Northern Illinois University, Dekalb, in 1970 At Tongue Point, she will be responsible for both basic and vocational education with an emphasis on staff growth and building a strong, cohesive educational program for the Corpswomen in line with the Job Corps philosophy.

Dr. Colbert, the new assistant director of Education, is presently an instructor at the Oregon State University's School of Education, Division of Vocational, Adult and Community College Education. From 1958-68, he was director of academic and vocational education at the Oregon State Correctional Institution in Salem.

A native Oregonian, Dr. Colbert was graduated from the University of Oregon with a bachelor of science in elementary education in 1955 He received a masters in education from Oregon College of Education in 1958 and his doctorate from Oregon State University this year.

ALLEY CATS

The BRECKINRIDGE, Ky., Job Corps team bowled them over at a local bowling alley recently. Breck's bowling team beat the Henderson (Ky.) High School team by 106 pins.

The victory was decided after a three-game session at the lanes. Henderson won the first game, 795-731. But Breck took the second game by 755-640 and the last game by 689-634.

Coach Joe Millay says, "I was pleased with the team's performance—especially the way the boys fought back after being down 64 pins after the first game."

The center bowlers are hoping to meet other area teams in the future.

MUSIC MAKERS

The electronics assembly students and instructors are fitting the pieces of a music system together for the business and clerical department at the TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Women's Center.

The system's control will be located in the office of the department supervisor, Lynn Morey. She plans to pipe the music into various business and clerical classrooms to provide a soothing atmosphere that will increase the students' productivity.

Northwest Roundup

City Closing RR Crossings

Separation of train and motor vehicular traffic down SE Sixth Avenue in Corvallis, the cause of many wrecks and congestion, is being solved as the result of a $330,000 project which will provide a 9-block-long Southern Pacific railroad right-of-way in the center and two 20-foot traffic lanes on each side. Three crossing streets will be permanently closed. Curbing and landscaping will be installed. Traffic is now 12 to 20 daily) from vehicular lanes. But may be rerouted soon.

McAnly Hospital in Coos Bay is the first such institution in the Northwest to hire outside management services while retaining local ownership. A one-year contract has been signed with Hospital Management Services of Oregon, Inc. which is owned by American Medicorp Inc., owner of two hospitals in Portland, one in Spokane and others across the nation.

New budget limitations announced this month will mean the discharge of about 25 employes at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center which now has a roster of 477 workers. The 1971-72 budget is pegged at $3.5 million which is only $28,000 more than the current one. The layoffs would come Aug. 1.

Northwest names in the news: Mrs. Ralph McLean, Springfield, Ore., has been elected vice chairman for Region 9 of the Young Republican Federation at the national convention in Arizona. Region 9 includes five Western states. Orville Nelson, in his first year as principal of Corvallis High School, has resigned for health reasons. He will return to classroom coaching. Washington County Soil and Conservation District took first place in the state competition for the annual Goodyear Conservation Awards and members Wilfred Peters, Forest Grove, and Harold W. Shaper, Beaverton, will be guests at the 10,000-acre Goodyear Farms in December.

IGLOOS AND HUSKIES

What's it like to be an Eskimo? Corpswomen at TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Job Corps Center for Women had a chance to find out at "Eskimo Night" in the recreation hall.

Alaskan Corpswomen told about their customs, housing, clothing, and games. "Indian" and "Black" nights are scheduled at later dates. It is part of a plan to teach Corpswomen about different ethnic groups.

THE THING

The girls at the TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Women's Job Corps Center are doing their "thing" on Thursdays. Freshman Corpswomen who have just hit the center are always the honored guests at the center's "Thursday Night Thing." The new women get together with senior Corpswomen and staff for refreshments.

Entertainment is usually on the agenda. The "Thing's" most recent star performer was the center's newly discovered "singing dentist," staffer Clarence McNair.

VISTA WORKERS

Three TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Corpswomen have joined the VISTA program as volunteers: Sherry Horton, Dolores Rodriguez, and Glynn Ward. The girls have already reported to San Francisco for training.

They will train there for 3 weeks and then transfer to Las Vegas, Nev., for additional training before assuming their assignments in that city.

During their VISTA service, the Corpswomen will work with preschool children and their parents in the Las Vegas ghetto.

Crocheting classes tops with Tongue Pointers

Sept. 15, 1971

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. —Learning to crochet has put Tongue Point Corpswomen into the fashion limelight on center.

The Corpswomen are learning about the art of crocheting as a part of the center's cultural enrichment program. The afternoon classes are held in the dorms under the direction of Mrs. Fleecie Jordan.

Twenty-two of the women recently showed off their accomplishments at an afternoon fashion show in Tongue Point's Theater.

The Corpswomen modeled outfits they had just completed in class. The fashions included everything from mini, midi, and maxi skirts to dresses, bikinis, and vests.

Classes are open to all Tongue Point enrollees.

SCHOOL DAYS—Tongue Point Corpswoman Clara Elliot models a mustard vest and skirt trimmed in green. Clara crocheted the ensemble herself for wear in class or at the office.

Tongue Point's 2,000th grad joins VISTA

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. —Tongue Point's 2,000th Corpswoman graduate is on her way to becoming part of the solution.

Glynn Ward has enlisted in VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) after graduating from the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women. A VISTA recruiting poster says, "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem."

VISTA enrollees work in urban ghettos, on Indian reservations, in migrant workers' camps, in rural areas, and sometimes at Job Corps centers, bringing help and showing concern to those in need of both.

"VISTA is really great so far," says Glynn. "It's the type of work I've always wanted to do."

Glynn left the Tongue Point Center for 6 weeks of training. That included 3 weeks of on-the-job training in San Francisco, Calif. After that, she was sent to Las Vegas, Nev., where she will work for the next year.

Glynn says that much of the training time was spent "getting familiar with a neighborhood and finding out what kind of work needed to be done there.

"We've been told about a lot of problems, but I think there's plenty of hope for improving the situation," Glynn says.

Glynn first got interested in Job Corps through conversations with one of her girl friends.

Her friend had signed up for Job Corps at about the same time that Glynn graduated from high school.

"I tried to get a job," Glynn recalls. "But people told me I just didn't have enough skills."

By this time, Glynn's friend had completed her Job Corps training and was on the job as a secretary.

"When I found out about that," says Glynn, "I was convinced. I signed up right away for Job Corps. I had always been interested in clerical work myself."

Glynn arrived at the Tongue Point Center in January 1970. A little over a year later, she became the center's 2,000th graduate.

"When I first got there, I was skeptical," she says. "But I knew why I was there and what my future goals were. My outlook soon improved."

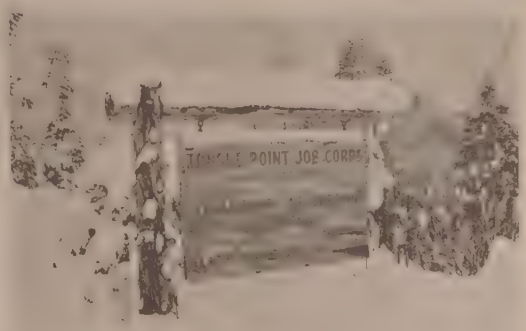
Glynn was an active Corpswoman. She was chairman of the drama club, played on the volleyball team, and participated in student government. At the same time, she was studying business and clerical skills.

After Glynn finishes her year with VISTA, she hopes to get a job as a secretary.

To those now in Job Corps, Glynn says, "Stick with it. Remember why you're in Job Corps and what you want to achieve.

"I know Job Corps can help you," says Glynn, "from my own experience."

It hardly ever snows at Tongue Point —but when it does, Corpswomen are ready



"SNOW SELDOM FALLS at sea level on the Oregon coast," says Astoria's weatherman. But a rare 12-inch snowfall hit the area recently, and the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women became a winter wonderland. The center is located at the mouth of the Columbia River—where heavy snow is said to be as rare as in Florida.

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. —The weather outside was frightful when a freak snowfall hit the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women. But Tongue Point Corpswomen carried on.

Snow seldom falls at sea level along the Oregon coast, where the center is located. There are exceptions to the rule, however—and during one of them, the center found itself buried under 12 inches of the fluffy white stuff.

Many of the Tongue Point enrollees were delighted with the weather. Some kept warm by engaging each other (and staff members) in old-fashioned snowball fights. Girls from southern California and Texas were getting their first look at real live snow.

Before the maintenance crews could finish clearing the roads around the center, much of the snow blew away under 90-mile-an-hour winds. The force of the wind toppled trees and billboards, smashed windows in the area, and left power lines dangling.

The center survived the storm, and activities continued much as usual. With the center again accessible, a group of troubadours from the University of Oregon came to entertain the Corpswomen.

The performers visited the center after an appearance in downtown Astoria. The students offered short skits from "Feiffer's People," a dramatization of the Jules Feiffer cartoon strip. They also added some musical numbers.

The entertainers appeared for about 20 minutes in each of several center classrooms. Afterwards they chatted with the Corpswomen. "The kids seemed to get a great deal out of it," said Jim Cameron, center staff member.

Cameron is the director of the drama workshop at Tongue Point. He set up this project last December as a way to give Corpswomen something to do during holidays.

Every Sunday night, the Corpswomen meet to do scenes from various plays. Students from Clatsop County Community College in Astoria often attend the worship as well.

The workshop players recently presented a variety program for the students of nearby Pacific University. Participating Corpswomen were Ruth Jackson, Josephine King, Lillian Martin, Lola Redmond, and Ella Williams.

The Tongue Point choral group, "The Starlighters," also performed. The girls sang "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," "Woman of the Bible Days," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and "Watchin' for My Child to Come Home."

"The Starlighters" are Regina Bernard, Gertrude Brasson, Delilah Bryant, Theresa Carter, Wylene Harris, Mary Hill, Christine Hodges, Adrian McNeal, and Pinkie Tolbert.

They are under the direction of Tongue Point staff member Wiley Hayes. The group also performs at churches and for various groups in Astoria.

After the performance at Pacific, the Corpswomen met some of the students. They talked with members of the Black Student Union, who thanked them for their performance and promised to do an exchange engagement at the center in the near future.

Schofield, NYC Veteran, Leaves Tongue Point

An 18-year-old Astoria youth "retired" recently from a job he had held for nearly three years.

Steve Schofield, Astoria, was given a party and special recognition for his efforts with the maintenance department at Tongue Point Job Corps Center. A participant of The Neighborhood Youth Corps, Schofield will be leaving later this month for training with the U.S. Marine Corps.

Ted Thompson, maintenance supervisor says Schofield "stuck it out" and that he was always "dependable, cheerful and energetic". When Schofield was attending school at Astoria High he worked weekends at the center and during summer months he was a full time employe of the department working at various tasks.

Aileen Moore, Clatsop director of NYC, says he "set a good example for other youths" . . . "He had a brother who also was connected with NYC and both are real good kids."

Men who worked with Schofield expressed a common feeling, that he "had no fear of work." Mrs Moore feels that Schofield is a very good example of the success of the NYC, a program that strives to find employment for young people

OCE associate professor new Crook County superintendent

PRINEVILLE — Dr Elvin "Tom" Williams, 46, will become Crook County School superintendent effective July 1, it was announced yesterday afternoon by the Crook County School Board.

He replaces A H Haberly, superintendent for the past eight years, who resigned recently. He will be superintendent of the Wallowa County Intermediate Education District.

Williams earned his doctor's degree in education from Oregon State University in 1969. In 1969-70 he instructed in the School of Education at OSU. This past year he has been an associate professor of educational research at Oregon College of Education at Monmouth.

Williams began his career in education at Springfield as a classroom teacher in 1950. He served as a vice principal at Springfield in 1951.

He spent two years at Junction City as vice principal and athletic coach, and two years at Elmira as a science instructor and coach. From 1954 to 1956 he was physical education instructor, basketball coach and math teacher at Burns High School.

He then attended the University of Oregon, where he did graduate work while acting as assistant director of intramurals. In 1958 he returned to Springfield to direct health, physical education and athletics.

In 1961 he was appointed to the post of assistant superintendent at Springfield, a post in which he served until 1964, when he moved to Tongue Point as director of health, physical education, athletics and recreation at the Job Corps Center.

In 1966-67 he was engaged in private business. He then returned to Oregon State University to earn his doctor's degree. Williams and his wife have five children.

Haberly said the school board received 23 applications for the superintendent's post. A screening committee made up of Dr. Frederick H Boyle, president of Central Oregon Community College, Dr. Evan Jones, representing local school committees, and Joe Stahancyk, a member of the board, narrowed the list of applicants to four. They were interviewed by the board prior to the final selection of Williams.

Job Corps Contract Renewal Contains Cut of 25 Employes

By PENNY MADDEN
Of the Daily Astorian

The Tongue Point Job Corps center has a new two-year contract, but, to meet its terms, approximately 25 employes will have to be cut from the Center payroll on or about Aug. 1.

This was the report Tongue Point Director Dr. Dorothy Burns presented to her staff Monday afternoon after returning from a week of talks which turned into negotiations with the Department of Labor in Washington, D.C.

The contract provides for a $3,893,360 budget for fiscal 1971-72, a boost of only $28,000 over last year's allotment.

This year's allocation contains what Dr. Burns called "exceedingly restrictive financial restrictions" dictated by legislative enactments and Labor Department edict. But the Tongue Point director views the situation as part of "the overall restrictions because of the war and the military" and noted that "the Job Corps simply did not get anymore funding at a level higher than its present level although there was pressure to get the national budget increased by 6 per cent." In this year, Dr. Burns said that "I'm sorry about what had to happen but I am pleased that we got as much as we did. We got more than the first centers."

Tongue Point officials expect the raise in this year's contract to be eaten up by salary increases enacted this year by Congress for Civil Service and academic employes. At the same time, however, the Center will implement revenue-saving measures suggested by Washington Job Corps executives according to Dr. Burns.

The most radical money saving move will be to cut the Tongue Point staff from roughly 477 to 450 employes.

Civil Service positions in cafeteria, janitorial and housekeeping areas will be completely eliminated. Direct academic posts will also be dropped.

The Civil Service jobs are to be turned into vocational areas for the Corpswomen. Dr. Burns said that attempts will be made to re-assimilate those affected by the personnel reductions and added that "we will help you however we can if you can't be reinstated here to be related."

Washington Job Corps officials also demanded cuts in the Tongue Point medical budget and Basic Education materials orders. They then asked Dr. Burns to look into the Center's Volunteer Assn. contract to see what money could be saved there and suggested that paid fire personnel positions be reconstituted and trimmed.

Built into the new budget are five more Resident Advisor (RA) positions and the stipulation that any profits realized by the 1971-72 fiscal realignment be put into hiring still more RAs. Dr. Burns and Washington officials feel it's necessary to get a better Corpswoman staff ratio to make the program work more beneficially for the youngsters involved.

Dr. Burns expressed most concern about the food services situation which will be greatly affected by the staff reductions. This she said is because a way must be found to feed the girls well and on time without placing so much pressure on the Corpswomen that Assn. cafeteria work will be an undesirable area.

Details of the 1972-73 budget according to Dr. Burns will be worked out at a later date to allow for any economic changes due to a turning down of the Vietnam War.

However, Dr. Burns and Washington officials discussed five areas which will be examined this year in hopes of building savings in to future Tongue Point allocations. These include an investigation of ways to reduce the transportation budgets for maintenance which amounted to more than $90,000 last year, what Dr. Burns termed "a tremendous amount just to keep pace with living." Building utilization specialists will conduct an in-depth study to improve building use.

Tongue Point will also examine the possibility of using surplus foods in its cafeteria and federal telephone lines and offices.

Joy, soul, and sorrow are reflected in music of Tongue Point Starlighters

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. — "The Starlighters," Tongue Point's choral group, sings the joy, soul and sorrow of black history into their gospel music.

"They build a cultural bridge with their voices," explains the Rev. Richard Sutton, minister of the nearby Astoria First Baptist Church. The Corpswomen often sing at his church and others in the area.

Reverend Sutton calls their singing "a sharing and learning experience" for his primarily white congregation. "The girls have real talent. They feel the music, and the people respond to them at a feeling level."

"The congregation clap their hands and tap their feet when they hear those happy sounds," says Mrs. Wiley Hays, the group's guiding light. "It's moving. When they've finished, the people sometimes applaud and beg for more."

Mrs. Hays, an orientation staff member at the center, organized "The Starlighters" last November. "One day I heard Corpswoman Delilah Bryant singing, and I thought, 'That's a voice that should be heard,' " she says.

Delilah, a Glynwood, Ga., girl, studied institutional housekeeping at Tongue Point and she is now working on her GED.

"When I first heard Delilah sing, I thought she should join a group or cut a record by herself," Mrs. Hays recalls. She decided to try to find other Corpswomen whose voices would blend well with Delilah's. And she found five more.

The first one she latched onto was Corpswoman soprano Adrienne McNeil. "I just can't sing," Adrienne protested at the time, but Mrs. Hays insisted, "Yes you can!" And she was proven right.

Now, Adrienne shares the solo spotlight with Delilah. Adrienne is a 17-year-old business and clerical trainee at the center. "Woman of the Bible Days" is her favorite gospel number.

Mrs. Hays enlisted another Corpswoman, Mary Hill, for her sewing as well as her singing. Mary, a business and clerical student who sings alto, made the group's costumes in addition to her vocal contribution.

The girls wear floor-length dirndl skirts of baby blue and long-sleeved white blouses when performing. "I finished the skirts in a day and a half," says Mary. "I taught myself to sew when I was living at home in Florida."

The singing Starlighters became a success in the area, but then the group was hit by the inevitable—graduation. Three of the six girls in the group went on to jobs.

But Mrs. Hays was able to recruit three sopranos from among the freshman Corpswomen at the center to replace them. The Starlighters sang on.

Corpswoman Linda Winfrey of El Centro, Calif., and Corpswomen Mamie Franklin and Lucy Pittman of Graceville, Fla., have joined the group. Mamie and Lucy knew each other in Florida.

Then about the end of March, the group added a seventh member, Gladys Williams. Gladys is from Mobile, Ala.

Sometimes the choir director's daughter, Wylene Harris, also sings with the group. She is a high school student in nearby Astoria. She says she loves to sing and would like to make singing her career.

Mrs. Hays thinks of the other girls as family, too. She mothers them, feeds them frequently in her home, and encourages them to use their "beautiful vocal chords."

"It's a fun thing with us. We help keep each other happy," she says.

Like most mothers, Mrs. Hays is a stickler for discipline. She sees that the girls rehearse their numbers at least three times a week. The director also makes sure the singers make it to engagements on time.

"I teach them to move when they sing. If they can't get a thing together, I'll play a Mahalia Jackson record for inspiration. When they hear her sing, they get happy and can put the number right."

Mrs. Hays also records the girls' rehearsals on tape. "That way they can hear their own mistakes. They can correct themselves."

The Starlighters have sung for every church in the Astoria area since they were organized. They sing spirituals such as "Go Tell It on the Mountain," "Amen," and "Gone the Last Mile."

Often, they sing in combination with the church choirs. "Sometimes, the older ladies in the church choirs tell me how much the young girls' enthusiasm helps them with their music," says Mrs. Hays.

The Starlighters sing on center for the weekly "Thursday Night Thing" and other happenings too. They also entertained students at Pacific University in Forest Grove and at Astoria high schools.

Next, the gospel singers are headed for an interracial music festival at the First Baptist Church in Portland. Reverend Sutton and members of the Astoria congregation will accompany the girls.

"We want to get together with music," says the minister. "The Starlighters will help us do it."

LIFT EVERY VOICE—Members of the Starlighters join other area choral groups for a special community sing program at the Tongue Point Center. Starlighter soloist Adrienne McNeil is at the microphone (right) as the singers join in the rousing spiritual "Amen." Other Starlighters are in the second row, behind members of the choir from the First Congregational United Church of Christ in Astoria, who are wearing gray robes. Also participating are singers from the Pacific University Black Student Union Chorus (white robes, back rows).

Federal Funds for UO Slashed by $2 Million

EUGENE (AP) — A number of programs at the University of Oregon have been hit by cutbacks in federal funding which have reduced total grants and contracts by about $2 million.

At least one project will be discontinued unless new funds are found. The University's Van de Graaf atomic accelerator will be shut down after five years of operation when an Atomic Energy Commission contract ends October 31. The AEC has provided about $200,000 a year for the accelerator in the past.

The AEC has cut spending for programs at 21 universities. Dr. Bernd Crasemann says Crasemann is a physics professor and one of four members of his department who have been mainly responsible for research using the accelerator.

Money Is Shifted

The money that would have been spent on accelerators at universities will be used instead for new facilities at the AEC National Laboratories in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Crasemann says. The jobs of ten research assistants, two post-doctoral fellows and a technician are in danger at the University of Oregon.

"The assistants are all doctoral students whose dissertation research depends on the accelerator," Crasemann says. "They're working day and night to get it done."

The National Science Foundation is planning to help schools hit by the AEC cutback, but Crasemann says fewer than 40 per cent can probably be helped and there would be a lag of up to two months even if the NSF decides to help the university.

Amendment Hits Grant

The Mansfield amendment, which ended Defense Department funding of research not directly related to security, meant a $35,000 Air Force grant to the physics department was lost.

National Science Foundation funding for summer operation of the Pine Mountain Observatory never came, and it is not known whether NSF funds will be available in September. The telescopes are being manned by three undergraduates and faculty members are on their own time when they visit.

The chemistry department has been hurt by cuts in federal fellowships for graduate students, says Dr. Virgil Boekelheide, the department's chairman. Less than ten fellowships in chemistry will be available next year, compared to a maximum of 30 in past years.

The department and the university have usually split the $2,500 allowance provided for each student above support paid directly.

Other Schools Hurt

But Boekelheide says the department has managed to keep most of its research grants although departments at other schools have lost heavily.

National Defense Education Act fellowships, which will cease to be available after next year, have provided as many as 72 students studying in various departments with support, but next year only 21 persons will receive NDEA help.

The department of special education lost $53,000 from last year's $270,000 for its program for training teachers for children with special needs.

But several other education projects will continue to be funded at about the levels of last year. Among them are the Tongue Point Job Corps Training Program near Astoria, the Head Start Follow Through Project and the Teacher Corps Corrections program, which trains teachers for work with delinquent and pre-delinquent children. Almost $5 million will be spent by the federal government through the university on these programs.

Center Gains Funds

The Center for the Study of Educational Administration and Educational Resources Information Center will both receive more federal money than in the past.

Department heads say cutbacks in federal funds may cause some faculty members to leave because of fears that their programs will be ended.

Successful competitors for federal funds tend to have programs with popular appeal, says Roland Pellegrin, the director of the university's Institute of Community Studies. "Ecology, pollution control and crime prevention are more apt to be funded," Pellegrin says.

Quintet Wins First in Nation

A Tongue Point Job Corps Center quintet, the Sweet Sounds of Soul, has won first place honors in a nationwide Job Corps instrumental music contest, according to word received today from Washington, D.C. by center director Dr. Douglas Burns. In naming the group defeated competition from some 70 women's and men's Job Corps centers.

Members of the Sweet Sounds of Soul are Debra Gale Walla Walla, Wash., who plays organ; Rhonda Morrell, Laurel, Miss., the group's bongos player; Pat Leonard, Oakland, Calif., on drums; Karen Hall, Charlotte, N.C., electric guitar and Willie Mae Dixon, Pearl River, La., also on guitar. Willie Miss Dixon, a student at Tongue Point Job Corps Center, is married and is the mother of two girls, [illegible] and [illegible]. Instrumental renditions of "Black Fox" and "Time is Tight" won the title for the girls on their way to the national title, the Sweet Sounds of Soul defeated Tongue Point groups in a contest held in January and judged by James Cameron, Jeanne Maddox Funkhouser and Donna House and captured the West Coast regional honors in San Francisco. The girls' performance was judged on basic musical ability, material selection and showmanship.

For the national balloting, each competing group sent a four to six minute performance tape to Washington, D.C. where national entertainment figures served as judges. For their win the Tongue Point Corpswomen will receive a watch and possibly a trip to the nation's capital.

The Sweet Sounds of Soul, without Miss Dixon, will play their winning pieces for fellow corpswomen in a special variety show Saturday at Tongue Point.

ATTEND MEETING

Five TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Job Corps Center Corpswomen recently met with teachers from a local high school. The girls discussed the school systems back in their hometowns with the Oregon teachers.

The teachers heard the girls' reasons for dropping out. The Corpswomen contrasted the Job Corps method with the methods used in their old schools.

Corpswomen Gloria Blackshear, Donna Boles, Deborah Jones, Jackie Minter, and Yola Verdugo participated. Frank Seehale, counselor, also attended.

Corpswomen Start Girls Drill Team

Tongue Point Job Corpswomen Pamela Watts, Los Angeles, Calif., and Pauline Brewer, Sacramento, Calif., have organized 25 of their colleagues into a jazz drill team. Patricia Trujillo, a counselor in Residence 2 is the group's advisor.

The new teams first playing date will be at the Astoria Regatta parade.

Recently the Tongue Point Center Life office was given the go ahead to provide $[illegible] to outfit the [illegible] for their routines. [illegible] will wear a white sweater blazer, redshirt and white shorts.

WEDDING BELLS

The bells are ringing for four TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Corpswomen and their bridegrooms.

Corpswoman Opal Webb marched down the aisle of the center's Ponderosa Lounge to marry Roy Takalo of Brownsmead, Oreg. The couple were married by the Reverend James Gantenbein, with family and close friends present.

Corpswoman Christine Lewis chose the Job Corps lounge in Portland, Oreg., as the site for her wedding. Christine married Joe Williams, ex-Corpsman from the TIMBER LAKE, Oreg., Job Corps CCC. Girls from Residence 4 and staff member Cathy Lacy attended the affair. This was the second Job Corps wedding to take place in the lounge.

Edward R. Blodgett III, son of Ed Blodgett, center safety and security director, and Corpswoman Ann Huffman were married at the local Church of the Latter Day Saints. The newlyweds greeted friends and family at a reception after the ceremony.

Corpswoman Deborah Jones Harris and her husband Arvilla are honeymooning in Tuscaloosa, Ala., at last. They were married a few months ago, but waited until Deborah's recent graduation before making the trip to Alabama. The pair met in Astoria, where the center is located and he is serving in the U.S. Coast Guard.

TROPHY WINNERS

Corpsmen from the MINGO, Mo., Job Corps CCC really appreciate company. And they showed it recently when a group of Corpswomen from EXCELSIOR SPRINGS, Mo., Women's Center dropped in for a visit. Two girls went back home with trophies.

Corpswoman Ardella Davis received one trophy for her far-out clothes. She was named the "best dressed" girl in attendance. Corpswoman Goldie Robinson trotted off with the other trophy. She and her partner won the dance contest.

STAFF WINS AGAIN

The MARSING, Idaho, Job Corps CCC All Star cagers lost their third game against the staff team recently. Final score was 69 to 52.

The All Stars were ahead by 1 point in the third quarter, but cooled off in the last quarter when the staff went ahead by 17 points.

High scorer for the Corpsmen was Kenneth Clay, who had 18 points. Corpsman Ronnie Davis had 12.

Other Corpsman players were: Ronald Hope, Leroy Stephenson, Ronnie Benton, Kenneth Cummings, Walter Jackson, Steve Crawford, Ronald Bowie, and Michael Hope.

CLEANUP CAMPAIGN

PINE RIDGE, Nebr., Corpsmen are trying to clean up after local litterbugs. The men from Dormitory II are clearing paper, cans, bottles, and other trash from Highway 385 near their center.

The Corpsmen began the project because they were concerned that the natural beauty of the Pine Ridge area was being marred by litter along the roads.

BLACK HERITAGE

Black heritage was the theme of a recent awards assembly at the TONGUE POINT, Oreg., Job Corps Center for Women.

The stage was decorated with portraits of 12 Negro leaders in various fields. Sketches of the lives of these men were given during the assembly. Soul music was played and Negro dances demonstrated.

Josephine King was named Corpswoman of the Month at the assembly. The center director's award for community service went to enrollee Yvonne Johnson. Corpswoman Anna Barney received the center director's award for center service.

Each month, a different ethnic group is featured during the awards meeting.

The senior citizens of Harrisburg First Methodist Church welcomed 22 Corpsmen from the GOLCONDA, Ill., Job Corps CCC to a group luncheon.

A singing group made up of Corpsmen Johnny Ford, George Lawrence, and Sam Presley entertained. They were accompanied by Corpsman Gerald Ward on the piano.

Center director William E. Morden gave a talk and showed the senior citizens some slides about Job Corps life during the visit.

"The people were very pleased with our program. They had a real nice time, and so did we," says Ron Nommo, one of the Corpsmen attending.

U-O cutbacks

Special Ed feels pinch

EUGENE — Federal agencies channel more funds into science and education than any other areas of the University of Oregon. In the college of education, one of the seven departments to feel the pinch of current cutbacks most acutely is the department of special education.

According to Herbert Prehm, head of that department, approximately $53,000 has been trimmed from last year's $220,000 budget for its training program.

Operating a special education training program on the $227,000 allotted by the U.S. Office of Education's bureau of education for the handicapped may not be disastrous Prehm says, but will create a district hardship.

He adds, however, that the department's 30 faculty members are viewing the cuts as "a challenge ... not an excuse for not trying to do something new."

In fact," he says, "it almost is mandatory to innovate. We'll be utilizing our staff in a wider variety of roles, with more team teaching and minicourses, for example.

"For the first time next year (1971-72) we're offering separate core programs at both the doctoral and master's levels. We're making some curriculum changes, too, that will make our course work more up-to-date and productive.

"Changes are all aimed at achieving our ultimate goal, which is training educators who can work with a wide variety of children, and not just producing specialists in the relatively narrow fields of mental retardation or teaching emotionally disturbed children."

The supply of such teachers has not caught up with the demand, according to Prehm, and all the department's doctoral level graduates found employment both last year and this year.

However, he says this trend may not continue, and "we don't want to turn out an excess number of Ph.D.'s who can't be absorbed into the job market."

For this reason, and because the number of current teaching faculty able to act as advisers for doctoral students is limited, a decision to reduce the number of doctoral candidates had been made even before the department was advised of budget cuts.

In the coming year the number of doctoral students will be reduced from 60 to 54.

Prehm says there will be no reduction in faculty as a result of the more limited funding, which he views more as a halt to expansion, or a "leveling off" by the U.S. Office of Education.

"We have one of the largest training programs in the country," he says, "and all of them have taken cuts so that smaller programs and new projects wouldn't be affected."

Most directly affected by the slowdown in federal funding will be the graduate students, both those 54 doctoral candidates and 90 in the master's program.

In the coming year these students will receive financial assistance through a new "block grant" system in which, Prehm says, the U.S. office intends each institution to handle student support in the way most appropriate to the university.

Last year 18 students for master's degrees received $2,000 stipends tax-free. In 1971-72 stipends of $870 will go to 20 students. 10 or 12 will earn $1,800 through part-time teaching fellowship and still others will receive grants of $450.

In the doctoral program in the past some students were receiving $3,200 stipends, plus tuition, plus allowances for each dependent, all of which were tax-free. In the coming year, Prehm says, each will receive graduate teaching fellowships worth $3,500.

For some special education doctoral students (those who are married and have several children) this will mean a reduction of almost 50 per cent in income. However, Prehm explains, the new block system means more students will receive some financial aid. "There is less money," he says, "but it is more evenly divided."

Undoubtedly, students receiving less money and forced to supplement their incomes by outside employment may take longer completing their education.

Unlike Prehm, who has received the word on funding for his department in 1971-72, John Loughary, head of the counseling department in the college of education, still was waiting to hear of his department's fate as of the middle of July.

Social and rehabilitation services in the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare are cutting back their funding to 50 per cent in the counselor area, as a whole, according to Loughary.

A cut in the counseling department's continuation grant of $212,000, which "we have had for years and years," Loughary says, "would cut off our major source of funding and could reduce our teaching faculty by one third."

There are 12 faculty members in the counseling department, and three teaching fellows.

Other major education programs funded by U.S. government agencies are being funded at approximately the same level as last year. These include the Tongue Point Job Corps Training Program centered at Astoria, [illegible] the Head Start Follow Through Project, a nationwide program for disadvantaged children in the primary grades, nearly $1 million; and the Teacher Corps Corrections Program which trains teachers to work more effectively with delinquent and predelinquent youth in more than $300,000.

In addition to these and other major training programs there are research programs that have yet to feel the sting of federal cutbacks, and some actually have received more federal aid for the coming year than they have in the past.

Roland Pellegrin, director of the Institute for Community Studies, says that two centers for educational research on the campus have held on despite tough competition.

The Center for the Study of Educational Administration (CASEA) and the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) both will receive more funds from the U.S. Office of Education than they did last year.

In fact, ERIC will get $250,000 funded for next year compared to $180,000 for 1970-71, as there is one of the nation's centers to show an increase for the local year.

The total for CASEA also will be up next year. Pellegrin says, "even though neither program will expand as far or as rapidly as need and interest might dictate."

CASEA, ERIC and other programs which manage successfully to compete for limited federal financing, Pellegrin says, "generally are of high quality and can compete in hard times."

Successful competitors understand the public climate and realize that programs that deal with such popular topics as "ecology, pollution control and crime prevention are more apt to be funded than others that have less popular appeal."

Making wise use of federal money depends both on knowing that funds are available for certain types of programs and on being very sensitive to the difficulties that can arise from depending too much on "soft money," believes Pellegrin.

Larry Neal, director of Project EXPAND, an interdisciplinary project that trains graduate students in special education, physical education and recreation to work with handicapped children, agrees that there is a selective process at work in deciding which programs should receive federal funds.

Extended now is entering the third year of its initial three-year grant, with every indication of receiving continued support, and Neal indicates there are other projects in the university's departments of health education and recreation, and park management which are deemed relevant by federal agencies because they are people-oriented and deal with current social and environment problems.

Although the social sciences are less dependent on the federal government for research monies than science and education, those that do receive such funds are not as lucky this year.

The psychology department received $80,000 from federal sources for research last year, and Robert Ingold, head of the department, says he expects a slight [illegible] of $60,000 to $70,000. Grants of $5,000 to $10,000 have been awarded by July, while several still are pending.

Ingold and other department heads agree that one of the [illegible] is a reduction in the number of graduate [illegible] for the university by [illegible] to [illegible].

16 Appointed to Posts in Job Corps Reorganization at Tongue Point Center

By PENNY MADDEN
Of The Daily Astorian

Reorganization at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center has resulted in the appointments of 16 to center posts.

The appointments made this week by Director Dr. Dorothy Burns were in connection with the manpower redevelopment program's realignment of its educational and vocational programs under the University of Oregon. Previously, Phuco-Ford handled these programs but their contract was dropped in the spring for financial reasons.

Three of the positions are new, one is basically a title change, the other 12 are to fill existing vacancies caused by staff turnover or additional Washington D.C. allotments.

Jean Morey, Portland has been named to the newly created post of Resident Manager Center Life. In that post she will be the assistant to William Patterson, the assistant director, Center Life, Residence Management. Her duties will include evaluating residential and recreational personnel, helping co-ordinate and develop the cultural enrichment program at the center, supervising on-center activities with the men's Job Corps centers, evaluating and quieting on-center disturbances and assisting the senior resident advisors in preparing cases for Campus Review Board.

Mrs. Morey had been supervisor of the business and clerical vocational educational program at the center under Phuco Ford. She left Tongue Point for the Portland Manpower Center in June. Her position, like most of the new appointees, takes effect Sunday.

The two other essentially new positions are those of psychometrist in psychological services and educational counselor filled by Dick Hailand, Joe Kelly, respectively. These two posts had previously been combined into the Group Testing and College Program post.

Hailand is a graduate of Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash. He received a masters degree in psychology in 1968 from the University of Oregon and had worked at Clatsop College before becoming a physical education instructor at Tongue Point in September 1970. In his new job, he will be an assistant to Gertrude Meriwether, assistant director, Center Life, Psychological Services, and will prepare psychological tests and interviews.

Kelly, the educational counselor, has been a supervisor in Residence 2 since February 1970. He will be largely responsible for the center's college counseling program.

Donald Westfall has assumed the title of coordinator Leisure Hours Program, a nomenclature which largely covers the job he has already been doing at the center, establishing and operating its cultural enrichment program and various other recreational programs for the corpswomen.

Five individuals have been named to senior resident advisor positions. They will be in charge of the general operations in their residences and particularly of the resident advisors. They are Verna Christiansen, Residence 1; Cora Williams, Residence 2; Harriet Waddy, Residence 3; Dorothy Gerard, Residence 4; and Sara Myers, Residence 5.

Mrs. Verna Christiansen has been a resident advisor in Residence 2 since 1967. Miss Williams had also been an RA in 2. Mrs. Waddy has been supervisor of Residence 3. Miss Gerard held the same position in 2. Mrs. Meyers comes to Tongue Point from Roseburg. She is a graduate of the University of Oregon and holds a M. Ed. from Montclair State College, Montclair, N.J.

Ron Searle, the new recreational instructor, is currently in Tongue Point's summer workshop program. He is a 1971 graduate of Oregon State University.

The six new resident advisors are Karen Gorton, Nina Wilson, Kathleen Choate, Denise Garland, Richard Lopez and Virgina Baugh. The center still has six RA positions vacant.

The crocheted fashions the girls will model will range from mini, midi and maxi skirts and dresses to bikinis and back to vests. The girls crocheted their own outfits under the encouragement of Fleecie Jordan a residence advisor in the "Village."

Mrs. Jorday is running a crocheting class in the dorm and for the center's cultural enrichment program, but the girls displaying their fashions Sunday are all from the "Village."

Tongue Point Elects Officers

Dorothy McMurtery was installed recently as the new student director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center's Student Government.

Miss McMurtery is from Madison, Miss.

Serving in her administration will be Alma Sadie Garner Barbara Roundtree and Ophelia Garcia.

Miss Garner the new deputy director is from Detroit. She arrived at Tongue Point in June 1970. The business manager, Miss Roundtree was a former talent director. She has been at Tongue Point since August 1969 and is from Orlando, Fla. Miss Garcia is from Sacramento, Calif. and is the newest student government officer at Tongue Point. She arrived on base in March.

All five officers are business and clerical students at the Job Corps Center.

TP Job Corps Realigns Food Education Program

By PENNY MADDEN
Of The Daily Astorian

The Tongue Point Job Corps Center this week embarked on a trial program which will affect both the center's corpswoman feeding program and its vocational education Food and Hospitality Services Dept.

The new program will add an additional class situation to the food services vocational area and will alter, and eventually reduce, cafeteria staff positions. According to the vocational supervisor Bud Gavino and TP Placement manager, Don Sell, this is a realignment rather than an actual change.

In essence the operation now allows the 110 corpswomen involved in the manpower redevelopment center's food services program to gain experience in mass feeding by preparing and serving, under staff supervision, cafeteria meals for the some 700 Job Corps enrollees. At the same time the adult cafeteria staff will be reduced and their job classifications will be transferred from Civil Service to academic positions. In effect, they well now become teachers as well as workers.

Under the old program, the adult cafeteria staff, with the aid of corpswomen on work experience, prepared the meals. Corpswomen in the food services program worked largely in the school's TeePee Room, a 100-seat restaurant used primarily for Tongue Point staff lunches.

The alteration in the program service, according to Sell, is the result of cutbacks imposed on Tongue Point in the new, two-year contract agreement between Washington, D.C. and the center.

The operation in its first week seems generally to be running smoothly, according to Gavino. The program's trial period will run at least a month to iron out unforeseen problems.

Tongue Point corpswomen in the Food Services and Hospitality Services Dept. now will have, at the optimum, Gavino said, an eight month training program which will include instruction both in mass feeding and feeding for relatively small numbers of people. The current program lasts six months and is housed mainly in the smaller Tee Pee room. According to Sell, mass feeding is one of the big markets in the employment field currently.

In preparation for their jobs, the girls will receive training in sanitation, pantry work and cooking, in that order of progression. This in itself does not differ from the former food services department scheme. Gavino stated, except that the corpswomen will now have the cafeteria as a classroom.

Astoria Planners Pushed

Representatives of federal and state agencies responsible for issuing permits of acceptable degree of pollution to Astoria have been called on the carpet by a U.S. Dist. Southwest field representative of the Interior Department.

The meeting will be held at 10 a.m. Thursday in Room 604 of the Bonneville Power Administration Building in Portland, Day said.

Day, a former Oregon legislator who went to work for Interior Secretary Walter Hickel as his personal trouble-shooter in the Northwest, has continued in the position under the present secretary, Rogers C.B. Morton.

DAY TOLD The Journal its purpose in calling the meeting is "to cut through the red tape to save some estuary and get construction on the sewage disposal facility under way."

He added that during a recent visit to Washington in government, "I have never seen the degree of confusion and lack of coordination between federal and state agencies which exists in this situation."

Monte Haris, secretary of Astoria said the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality approved the project, which will provide secondary treatment of Astoria's sewage. But consideration of secondary treatment, not subsequently, other federal and state agencies ordered further review and study.

A $14 MILLION federal grant also has been approved, Steinbock said.

The federal government's decision would allow Astoria to dispose of sewage into the lagoon should it

Steinbock's new system approves engineering, design and first construction. Besides it & Rumble, the consulting recommended the secondary treatment system at Bonneville next. Tongue Point was its first choice to treat the Humble Gas and processing plant, but was rejected by Humble Gas.

Day, however, said his personal inspection of the proposed sites convinced him that 22 acres of marginal land at Tongue Point could be saved by filling for approx. 1,500 feet into the river which has already been filled.

"ONLY ABOUT seven acres of additional estuary would have to be filled if this location is chosen," Day said. He added that it would take pretty persuasive evidence to make me change my mind."

An estimated $10,000 saving in construction costs would be achieved by moving the sewage area to land which would be filled Day said.

Steinbock said the plans of the engineering firm he represents at Day have adapted to the lagoon's proximity to their property.

WHEN ASKED IF he knew that the agency owners had agreed a petition urging the location of the sewage near them, Day replied, "I don't care about the subject if the decision is right."

He said his recommended site cannot be seen from any residential area and "all it just isn't that much different from the city's choice."

"We're going to insist that the estuary be saved," Day declared.

Astorian To Attend Boys' Nation

Bob Colbert, son of Austin M. Colbert, a new resident of Clatsop County, has joined a group of 100 youths in Washington, D.C., for week long activities in connection with the 26th annual Boys' Nation of the American Legion.

Colbert formerly of Corvallis, recently became assistant director of education at Tongue Point Job Corps Center. Bob will be a senior at Astoria High School this fall.

Young Colbert and his fellow junior "senators" will undertake a week-long exercise in high level government operations designed to provide an insight into the workings of the federal government. He earned his trip to Washington as an outstanding graduate of the 1971 Boys' State of The American Legion Dept. of Oregon.

Through the process of "Federalist" and "Nationalist" party mock conventions, he will participate in the nomination of a candidate and the ultimate election of a president of the 1971 Boys' Nation.

Highlights of the Boys' Nation program will include a visit to Congress, lunch with Sen. Mark Hatfield (R.-Ore.), a visit with Sen. Bob Packwood (R.-Ore.), visits to the Department of Defense, State Department and Civil Service Commission and a trip to the White House where the youths hope to meet with President Nixon. They will also visit Arlington National Cemetery to pay tribute to the dead of all wars by laying a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknowns.

Boys' Nation is sponsored by the Legion's National Americanism Commission.

UO Programs Cut $2 Million

EUGENE (AP) — A number of programs at the University of Oregon have been hit by cutbacks in federal funding which have reduced totalgrants and contracts by about $2 million.

At least one project will be discontinued unless new funds are found. The University's Van de Graaf atomic accelerator will be shut down after five years of operation when an Atomic Energy Commission contract ends October 31. The AEC has provided about $200,000 a year for the accelerator in the past.

The AEC has cut spending for programs at 21 universities, Dr. Bernd Crasemann says. Crasemann is a physics professor and one of four members of his department who have been mainly responsible for research using the accelerator.

The money that would have been spent on accelerators at universities will be used instead for new facilities at the AEC's National Laboratories in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Crasemann says. The jobs of ten research assistants, two post-doctoral fellows and a technician are in danger at the University of Oregon.

"The assistants are all doctoral students whose dissertation research depends on the accelerator," Crasemann says. "They're working day and night to get it done."

The National Science Foundation is planning to help schools hit by the AEC cutback, but Crasemann says fewer than 40 per cent can probably be helped and there would be a lag of up to two months even if the NSF decides to help the university.

The Mansfield amendment, which ended Defense Department funding of research not directly related to security, meant a $35,000 Air Force grant to the physics department was lost.

National Science Foundation funding for summer operation of the Pine Mountain Observatory never came, and it is not known whether NSF funds will be available in September. The telescopes are being manned by three undergraduates and faculty members are on their own time when they visit.

The chemistry department has been hurt by cuts in federal fellowships for graduate students, says Dr. Virgil Boekehleide, the department's chairman. Fewer than ten fellowships in chemistry will be available next year compared to a maximum of 30 in past years.

The department and the university have usually split the $2,500 allowance provided for each student above support paid directly.

But Boekehleide says the department has managed to keep most of its research grants although departments at other schools have lost heavily.

National Defense Education Act fellowships, which will cease to be available after next year, have provided as many as 72 students studying in various departments with support, but next year only 21 persons will receive NDEA help.

The department of special education lost $53,000 from last year's $270,000 for its program for training teachers for children with special needs.

But several other education projects will continue to be funded at about the levels of last year. Among them are the Tongue Point Job Corps Training Program near Astoria, the Head Start Follow Through Project and the Teacher Corps Corrections program, which trains teachers to work with deliquent and pre-delinquent children. Almost $5 million will be spent by the federal government through the university on these programs.

The Center for the Study of Educational Administration and the Educational Resources Information Center will both receive more federal money than in the past.

Department heads say cutbacks in federal funds may cause some faculty members to leave because of fears that their programs will be ended.

Successful competitors for federal funds tend to have programs with popular appeal, says Dr. Roland Pellegrin, the director of the university's Institute for Community Studies. "Ecology, pollution control and crime prevention are more apt to be funded," Pellegrin says.

Corpsmembers excel at winter sports

Winter sports are "in"—and mostly indoors—at Job Corps centers around the country.

Whether they're brandishing a boxing glove or a ping pong paddle, or throwing a basketball or volleyball, Corpsmembers are in the swing of winter sports.

On these pages, The Corpsman looks at some wintertime athletic activities at three Job Corps centers: Breckinridge, Ky., Men's Center; and the Guthrie, Okla., and Tongue Point, Oreg., Women's Centers.

Guthrie, Okla., Corpswomen especially enjoy volleyball, bowling and basketball during the winter months.

Before Corpswomen at the center start participating in volleyball games, they are taught the fundamentals of the sport in physical education classes.

They also learn the importance of team play and good sportsmanship.

In addition to regular intramural (on-center) competition, the center sponsors a team which plays in the Oklahoma Volleyball League.

Guthrie Corpswomen are looking forward to the OV League's statewide tournament. In preparing for it, the Corpswomen have played warm-up games with local high school and civic group teams, and with a team from nearby Langston University.

"The most important thing is to have the feeling that you are never going to lose," says Corpswoman Joyce Stevens, a member of the team.

"It's exciting; you have a feeling of suspense about how the game will turn out. You want to win, of course," she adds.

Over 150 Corpswomen participate once a week in bowling activities in one of the many modern bowling lanes in the Oklahoma City area.

The center's own bowling team also competes with local colleges and high school teams.

For the past 2 years, Guthrie Corpswomen have played in the Oklahoma State Women's Basketball Tournament. They are preparing for this year's tournament by competing with local high school and college teams.

Recently, Guthrie's basketball team garnered third place honors in the Oklahoma City YWCA Basketball Tournament, so hopes are high for the statewide tournament.

Tongue Point

The Tongue Point, Oreg., Job Corps Center for Women also has a wide variety of indoor offerings for sports-minded Corpswomen.

At the recreation hall, Corpswomen can use the bowling lanes, the roller skating rink, the "slimnastic" lounge, pool and ping pong tables, and volleyball court.

In the field house are a basketball court, badminton court, overhead ladders, indoor archery range, and gymnastics areas.

Last year, the center's bowling team won all 12 of its matches with schools in the area. Tongue Point Corpswomen bowled against teams from Clackamas Community College, Portland State University, David Douglas High School in Portland, and other school and civic teams.

The Corpswomen already are bowling to get in shape for rematches this year.

Says Tongue Point Corpswoman Linda Ekerson, "The good thing about sports here is that the staff gets involved. They give the girls help when they need it, so that everything works out."

Linda is a teacher's aide in physical education at the center. She adds, "I enjoy working with the other girls because it gives me good experience and a chance to learn more about sports. It will help me later on."

Linda is planning to attend college when she leaves the center and major in physical education.

Tongue Point's basketball team is getting in shape for the season, too. The Corpswomen are looking forward to games with Clatsop Community College and Lower Columbia College, and with other local teams.

"I think we're going to have a good team this year. I've seen some of the girls playing," says Corpswoman Charlotte Brown.

Charlotte didn't even know how to play basketball when she came to the center. Now she hopes to be on this year's team.

She says, "When I saw the girls shooting in physical education class, I could not wait to learn the game. Now I practice a lot in my spare time."

Breckinridge

At least 700 Corpsmen at the Breckinridge, Ky., Men's Center are involved in indoor sports every day, according to avocation supervisor Pierre Jackson.

Breckinridge Corpsmen can sign up for instruction in bowling, basketball, volleyball, archery, and gymnastics.

SOCKING IT TO—Breckinridge Corpsman Otis Clark (right) delivers a strong right to fellow Corpsman Eugene Davis in a center boxing match. Otis won the match. The sport has become so popular there that plans are underway to hold matches once a week.

A WIDE VARIETY of indoor sports are available to Tongue Point Corpswomen, including basketball, bowling, skating, table tennis, badminton, pool, volleyball, archery, and gymnastics. Above, Corpswoman Geraldine Britten (foreground) swings her racket in a fast-paced badminton game.

Dr. Burns to Head NW Job Corps Region

Dr. Dorothy Burns, Tongue Point Job Corps Center director, has been named as Assistant Regional Manpower Administrator for the U.S. Department of Labor for the Job Corps in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. Her new position takes effect Aug. 30.

As Asst Regional Manpower Administrator, Dr. Burns will be in charge of 10 Job Corps centers and corpswomen recruitment throughout the Northwest region. She will be based in Seattle.

The job Dr. Burns has accepted is essentially a new position heralding a realignment of manpower administration regions. The Northwest states which come under her jurisdiction now comprise the Labor Department's Manpower Region 10. Previously their regional office was based in San Francisco.

No successor has been named to her Tongue Point post. University of Oregon Dean Robert Gilberts will be at the center Monday to interview prospective center applicants for the job. He has already interviewed some out-of-state applicants.

Dr. Burns arrived at Tongue Point as its director in 1967 after serving as an administrator and counselor at Cabrillo College, near San Francisco.

She recently presided over a massive reorganization of the 750 corpswoman capacity Astoria center.

Weather Didn't Stymie Regatta Enthusiasm

By PENNY MADDEN
Of The Daily Astorian

Somehow the weather is seldom with Astoria.

The summer sun held through Friday's kiddies day events then decided John Jacob's namesake might be getting a bit too used to good weather. Saturday's sun covered itself with fog and exhaust fume colored clouds to disuade Regatta partakers from swarming over the Commercial Street "people's mall," enjoying Columbia River water ventures and parade gawking.

But Astorians, used as they are to weather highjinks, ignored the day's chill and imagined themselves immersed in sunlight.

They did take over Commercial Street — although the conquerers were largely young. Their youth chagrined local merchants who had hoped to profit by the Commerical Street closure. A spotcheck of businessmen suggested that many took profit losses during the two-day street close-down. Those whose monetary input stayed constant, attributed their situation to regular customers. By and large, however, the businessmen were reluctant to suggest that the street closure idea be dropped, mentioning the inevitable problems when a new idea is put into effect. Merchants, and a number of pedestrians, seem to feel simultaneously, that exhibits on the mall area were too scattered and that the major participatory and show events — the kiddies day races and dance presentations — were too concentrated in the 10th to 11th block. They felt that the various presentations should be rotated from block to block.

"People's Mall"

Astorians not only took over the "people's mall," they also lined up three deep to witness the day's Grand Land parade. As single entries, the Bumble Bee Seafood's queen's float and the Angell Job Corps Center's drill team generated the most excitement among the crowd. The Bumble Bee float won the queen's trophy and first place in the commercial float division. Pacific Power and Light won second place honors in the commercial division.

The Angell crew placed second behind the Blue Devils of Seattle in the non-military marching unit group.

Grand Sweepstakes Award

The Grants Pass Cavemen copped the grand sweepstakes award donated by Pacific Northwest Bell. The Sunsetters Drum and Bugle Corps won the Junior Drum and Bugle Corps trophy and the Tongue Point Job Corps Center received first place in the non-commercial float division. The Scandinavian Midsummer Festival Assn. was second. The Civil Air Patrol, Astoria Composite Squadron, placed first in the military marching unit.

Other winners included: Astoria High School Pep Band, first in the band division with the KAST all-transistor band second; the Clatsop County Sheriff's Posse, first in mounted units with the Clatsop County Rodeo Queen and Court second; the Grants Pass Cavemen, first in the novelty group with the U.S. Navy "Seabees" second.

The Lions' salmon bake that evening served a continuous flow of customers many of whom later attended the Admiral's Dance.

Victorian Arts Festival

Sunday was sports day for the Regatta and Victorian Arts Festival time at the Clatsop County Historical Museum, giving people a choice of fare. Many of the craftsmen who had exhibited on the south end of Commercial Street Friday and Saturday moved into the Flavel House gardens Sunday to show their wares and pluck their guitars. Visitors touring the museum heard the strains in the backyard with the Plus One from Mt. Hood Community College and Bob Biddle singing religion oriented songs.

They were spelled by Jan Shaffer's announcement of the poetry award winners. First place went to Imogene Mallett, Lincoln City, second to Doreen Gandy, Portland; third to Edda Bunz, Roseburg and an honorable mention to Victoria Denny, Astoria.

Tongue Point official wins high NW post

Dorothy Burns, director of the University of Oregon's Tongue Point Job Corps center at Astoria, has been named assistant regional manpower administrator for all Job Corps centers in the Pacific Northwest.

The United States Department of Labor, parent agency for the Job Corps, made the announcement Friday. Mrs. Burns will assume her new duties Aug. 30 at the regional manpower administration office in Seattle, Wash.

Officials at the U of O said Friday they hope to name a replacement as director of the [illegible] center [illegible] under way.

Regional Manpower Administrator Jess Ramaker said Mrs. Burns' new duties will make her responsible for operation of the 10 Job Corps centers in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, as well as for recruitment of enrollees in the four-state area. The 10 centers have a combined enrollment of about 2,360 young people.

Mrs. Burns holds the rank of professor of education with the U of O, which is prime contractor for the Tongue Point center with the Labor Department. She has been chief administrator for the center since 1967.

Before that she was an instructor, counselor and administrator for a number of high schools and community colleges. She received a doctorate in education from the U of O and also completed academic work in several colleges and universities in eastern states and California.

At Tongue Point, Mrs. Burns directed a residential training program for 750 young women, with heavy emphasis upon vocational-technical education, general education and counseling.

...now Welcome

When you're far from home in a strange, new setting, it can be a bit scary and lonely. That's why Tongue Point officials are asking interested residents and business persons to introduce new Job Corpswomen to the Astoria area.

New Corps trainees are taken on bus tours of the area. Officials are always looking for business operators who would like to show corpswomen through their businesses and residents who would like to host one or more of the girls in their homes or on an outing. It's a good way to bridge the gulf that inevitably exists between a community like this and persons who come from sharply different backgrounds and environments.

If interested, get in touch with Sara Meyer or Jim Cameron at Tongue Point or Mrs. Helmer Lindstrom of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council.

Astoria Sewage Plan May Face U.S. Study

The possibility that the because horrendous increases in Army Corps of Engineers may costs" which would probably call for a full environmental stymie the project.
impact study and public hearings on a proposal to build a "lagoon treatment" sewage disposal plant for Astoria emerged Thursday at a meeting of state and federal officials in Portland.

Col. Paul D. Triem, district engineer for the Corps' Portland District, said that unless differences can be ironed out between the U.S. Department of Interior and the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) on choice of a site for the sewage lagoons he may recommend the study and public hearings.

That would cause up to a year's delay.

TRIEM'S COMMENT came near the close of a session at which representatives of state and federal agencies clashed over approval of Astoria's plan to build three sewage treatment lagoons on estuary lands near Tongue Point.

The DEQ had approved the project, the result of Astoria's favorable vote on a $5 million bond issue and a federal grant of $1.6 million already sanctioned as part of the program to clean up the nation's streams.

But the Corps of Engineers and other federal agencies with newly created responsibilities to maintain environmental quality were not notified of Astoria's program until last May, Triem noted. Because the Columbia River is a navigable stream, the Corps must review all proposals which have an environmental impact and issue a permit before construction can start.

THE DISPUTE between state and federal agencies occurred at a meeting at the Bonneville Power Administration building in Portland called by L B Day, Northwest representative of Oregon governor Tom McCall.

Rogers C.B. Morton, in announcing the meeting, Day said he had "never seen the degree of chaos or lack of coordination between federal and state agencies which exists in this situation."

Day proposed to the meeting a "compromise" new location of the treatment lagoons about 1,500 feet west of the site chosen by the City of Astoria after it ordered a study of possible sites by a committee of the Astoria Area Chamber of Commerce. The committee suggested seven alternative locations on Young's Bay and the Columbia River estuary.

THE CITY narrowed the choice to two sites, one near the Bumble Bee seafood processing plant and the other on a mud flat adjacent to Tongue Point which would require filling. When Bumble Bee objected to the nearby site, the city chose the second and it was approved by the DEQ.

With Federal Help . . .

Donna Kelly Forges New Career

KNAPPA — Have you ever been puzzled, as many Americans today have been, by the vague feeling taxes spent on welfare are money down the drain? If so, this story should reassure you that your taxes spent on "human resources" are reaping some positive returns.

After her divorce, Donna Kelly was left with the support of herself and four active children. Though the aid of the Manpower Development and Training Act, she was able to obtain a much needed practical education which helps her to support her family today.

R J Morrison, manager of the State of Oregon Employment Service in Astoria, stated, "Mrs. Kelly is one of our best success stories." He further explained, "the MDTA is a division of the Oregon Employment Agency which began in Astoria in 1964, one of the first offices to put this job-training technique into effect. Utilizing the services of Clatsop Community College and other authorized training schools in the state, MDTA s purpose is to train the individual and to bring him up to a level where he can obtain employment, it is not a substitute college education. MDTA is careful not to train their people for any sub-standard paying occupations, but, to equip them to support themselves at a living wage in the community.

"As a recipient of MDTA Morrison continued, there are, of course, some criteria an individual must have an extremely low or no income; a number of dependents, age (under 22 and over 45); mental or physical handicaps; must be school drop-outs, or from minority groups. After an occupational goal is decided upon, the references are sent to Salem for approval. Upon State approval, the recipient is then funded to obtain a practical education."

Mrs Kelly, one of the first to receive this type of aid, was born in Kansas and came to this area when she was six years old. As Donna Israel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Israel, she attended Knappa elementary and high school, graduating in 1952. After her marriage failed, she was faced with the problem of earning a living and supporting her four children. Her three sons, Mike, Pat, and Tim were star athletes last year on the Knappa High championship basketball team. Her 13-year-old daughter, Lynnette, is in the eighth grade at Hilda Lahti elementary school. Her son, Mike, will be a freshman at Central Oregon College of Education at Bend this fall.

Mrs. Kelly stated, "with four children to feed, clothe and educate, I had to find help somewhere in obtaining work. The boys' counselor at Clatsop College told me about the MDTA program and I applied. I received my job training in the field of cosmotology and with my beauty college degree, I've been able to set up my own Beauty Shop. I don't know how I could have made it without this help at this time in my life."

Mrs. Kelly graduated from the Astoria Beauty College in November 1970 and passed her state board exams in hair dressing, cosmotology, and manicurist. She has been busy lately turning part of her home into a beauty shop which will be open for business Aug. 24.

Besides this work, she is a busy mother and house-keeper and also manages to work part time as resident advisor at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center.

"Where From Here?" T.P. Grads Asked

Lynn Morey, the newly appointed Residence Manager at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, asked, then began answering the question "Where do we go from here?" for 25 graduating Job Corpswomen Wednesday. Mrs Morey had been head of the business and clerical vocational educational department until she moved to the Portland Manpower Development Center in May.

Job Corps Support

Upon my departure from Astoria, I am eager to thank Mayor Harry Steinbock, other city and county officials, and so many people in Astoria for their excellent support and cooperation. My family and I leave this beautiful area with deep regret but at the same time with heart-warming memories of pleasant associations and many friendships. We have been so well received in this community that we have felt very much a part of Astoria; consequently, we are making a most reluctant departure.

Many times over the past four years, numerous events have occurred in connection with our Tongue Point program which could have created strained relationships in Astoria. As together we have sought solutions to problems, we have found cooperation and recognition of the fact that our program is one of youth rehabilitation, which by its very nature will involve some problems. So many people like Mrs. Helmer Lindstrom and Adelain Sather have given generously hundreds of volunteer hours in order to join forces with us in assisting our corpswomen develop into responsible citizens. So many local families have taken our girls into their homes so that girls who may be far from home feel the warmth of a family and children. As Director, I have been keenly aware of all of these gestures of human concern for the welfare of our girls and deeply appreciative.

When a new director is selected, may I ask that you continue to lend your full support and cooperation?

Corpswomen Protest Advisor's Dismissal

Some 75 Tongue Point Job Corpswomen are protesting the dismissal Tuesday of a residence advisor in Residence 3. Negotiations in the disagreement are being carried out by corpswomen representatives and the offices of the deputy director the associate director, Center Life and the resident manager, Center Life.

Gene Norris, associate director, Center Life, said the protest, which has been peaceful, erupted after RA Gail Murphy was called to his office late Monday and told that job deficiency reports on her RA efforts might put her job in jeopardy if they were not cleared up. Miss Murphy, according to Norris, then returned to Residence 3 and asked for the floor at a residence meeting already in progress where she discussed certain disgruntlements about the center and called some of the vocational program "slave labor."

A spontaneous protest of about half of the residence's 120 members then developed. Miss Murray was fired Wednesday. She was hired July 7.

Wednesday morning a group of protesters congregated on the steps of the center administration building asking to talk to Dr. Dorothy Burns and present a list of some 16 demands for what they consider to be center improvement. Tongue Point administration members are meeting today with residence staffs and corpswomen to further discuss the demands, many of which the administration has concurred.

Dr. Burns

An editorial here several months ago praised the abilities of Dr. Dorothy Burns, director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, who was to have taken a job with the Dept. of Labor in Washington, D.C.

Dr. Burns didn't take that job, but will assume new duties next week in Seattle with the Dept. of Labor. She will oversee the Job Corps centers in the Northwest.

Our feelings about the capable, knowledgable and tactful administrator are unchanged since news of her leaving several months ago. The lady will be missed here.

FORTLAND (AP) — L. B. Day, district representative of the U.S. Department of the Interior said Thursday the department will oppose location of a proposed $5 million sewage treatment plant by the City of Astoria at the site has selected.

Day, meeting with state and federal agency representatives, said an adjacent site downstream from the city's proposed location, near Tongue Point on the Columbia River, would probably be acceptable to his agency.

Using the proposed site would destroy 20 to 30 acres of estuarial land needlessly, Day said.

T.P. Girls Clean Up Rt. 101

Nine Tongue Point Job Corpswomen participated in Governor Tom McCall's litter campaign Wednesday. The girls picked up trash on Rt. 101 from Seaside south on the Seaside Highway to Portland. The campaign is essentially a contest being run in nine geographical areas around the state to see which group can gather the most refuse. The winning contingent captures $300

The Tongue Pointers participating, all student government representatives, were:

Glenda Eckerson, Gladstone, Ore; Sandra Fisher, Blaine, Wash.; Patricia Garlitos, Judy Martin and Ingrid Icasiano, all of Stockton, Calif.; Molly Ipalook, Kotzebue, Alaska; Ida James, Demopolis, Ala.; Dorothy McMurtery, Madison, Miss.; and Rona Music Tacoma, Wash.

Emerald Heights Youths to Get Play Areas

Some 300 youngsters in the Emerald Heights area will benefit from the efforts of volunteers in the clearing and preparing playground areas in the Heights. Through a joint effort of families of Tongue Point staff and U.S. Coast Guard personnel, some four or five play areas are nearly completed.

The group has raised funds through door to door solicitation, a rummage sale and is planning a spaghetti feed, open to the public, for June 5 at the community hall.

To date the workers have poured concrete for a small basketball court, cleared a mini-bike trail through the woods, built sandboxes, cleared land and are in the process of securing and erecting playground equipment such as swings and teeter-totter.

Volunteers work in the evenings and on weekends or as a spokesman for the group says, "Whenever the sun shines."

Lucky for Cameron his aunt wasn't practical

By PENNY MADDEN
Of The Daily Astorian

For his twelfth Christmas, Jim Cameron's parents gave him clothes and underwear. His aunt, in that California winter of 1933, gave him a 35 cent top balcony theatre ticket to see "Merry Widow". The Pennsylvania-born lad who moved from near Pittsburgh, Pa., to Pittsburg, Calif in 1929, has been hooked on theatre ever since.

Actually, Jim Cameron's love affair with theatre had begun even before he saw the San Francisco production of "Merry Widow" with Helen Gahagan Douglas. Although his parents felt no great attraction for the stage—his father was an accountant with U. S. Steel, the young man with the Bob Hope nose and mischevious grin was avidly reading theatre columns while in grade school. He had starred in his first play by the time he was 10. In "Why the Chimes Rang," a Christmas parable, Jim played the poor boy who had only pennies to offer while all around him had fortunes.

With the play's success behind him, Jim Cameron knew he was destined to spend his life in theatre.

The mild-mannered Co-ordinator for Community Services at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center now calls theatre a "hobby." But from 1946 to 1969 it was a profession which pushed and pulled him across the United States three times. Even now, it is a pleasantly obsessive hobby which sends him on weekends down the Sunset Highway to Portland and beyond to act in and direct productions. And "when people say to me, how can you do theatre and a job too," he answers with probably the greatest sense of frustrated urgency that he ever musters, "Well, how do you have time for bowling."

As a matter of fact, Jim thinks his theatrical training has helped him a good deal in his Tongue Point job. Being an actor and a director demands a sensitivity to other people and, in this respect, Cameron thinks that "the theatre carries over into this, into the relationships with the kids." It also has provided him with some valuable contacts throughout the state, contacts which cannot only help involve the corpswomen in community affairs, particularly cultural areas, new to them, but contacts which can also provide the Job Corps with a valuable information-educational forum.

Cameron himself is a charmingly graying man, nearing the half-century mark. His approach is quiet and appealing, even when assertive, making it impossible to contradict him, giving him a calm commanding presence. He is outgoing, in fact, all encompassing. His tone is gentle, even caressing, and curiously introspective, as is his body. When Jim Cameron laughs, his shoulders tilt slightly forward, his head turns down, his feet even seem somehow to lift up and what comes out is a controlled, quiet, yet enormous sense of mirth. Frequently the mirth is pointed at himself or one of his theatrical escapades.

Cameron received a BA in speech and drama from the University of California, Berkeley but had to wait until after his stint as a naval officer working in the Philippines during WWII to begin his professional theatrical career as the general stage manager for the Barter Theater of Virginia in Abingdon.

In 1948, Cameron began his first round-trip journey across the United States. He stage managed San Francisco's Straw Hat Review for a season then headed east for a summer as stage manager and actor with the Peterborough, N.H. Players then went again to become director of the Portland Civic Theater. His first Portland engagement lasted from 1949 to 1955 and resulted in an engagement of a different kind.

Director Cameron put out a call for an ingenue for a production of Noel Coward's "Hay Fever." Grants Pass High School drama coach Marie Churchill thought she had a likely candidate in a young girl named Virginia Stone. Ginny won the part, eventually won the director himself and became in time half of one of the best known acting duos in Oregon.

In 1955 the Camerons left Portland for another journey eastward, a time Jim remembers with a mixture of whimsy and wistfulness as "seven marvelous years. That was our fling pre-children." The "east" in this case meant commuting between winter seasons as the director for the Youngstown, Ohio, Playhouse and summer seasons as production stage manager and director of the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, Mass. as well as a one-year stint as the production stage manager for an Off-Broadway play called "Madame Aphrodite."

In Ohio, Jim and Ginny Cameron began their now celebrated concert readings. The readings then, as now, were "mainly comedy because that is what people want." They are also comedy because that's what Jim and Ginny like to act best. "We're not really Shakespearian, he says, we're more of the present." And, he continues, "the nice thing about comedy is that you know immediately when the people are with you and when they're not."

He and Ginny particularly like sketches and reviews like "The Present Tense" which has been running in Portland and which the couple will take to Salishan next week. They, and the concert readings are fun, he says, "because you play at least four different parts in a program." For instance in "The Present Tense," Cameron plays the choral director of a bad choral society, the hero of a 1920's silent movie, a James Bond-type and a man who thinks he's a chicken."

The kind of comedy the Camerons enjoy is what Jim calls "the comic situation, where people are people" who get themsleves into a funny predicament instead of being comic individuals in their own right. In "The Present Tense" and other Cameron reviews, the couple tries to avoid charicature in favor of developing a character in a three to five minute segment.

This is the kind of comedy they developed in Ohio, Massachusetts and New York and brought back to Oregon with them in 1962 when Jim became the Executive Director of the Portland Civic Theatre. He and the Portland group parted company in 1967. Jim then became the executive director of the Lewis and Clark Festival Assn. and Summer Theatre and a Clatsop Community College instructor until the theatre folded for lack of funding in December 1968. Cameron joined the Job Corps staff in January, 1969 as work experience director and became the community services co-ordinator in that summer.

In his 25 years of theatrical experience, Jim Cameron has not discovered the formula for perfect play direction. What he has found is that "there are no rules" for directing a play, even though the "director is responsible for what finally appears on stage, whether he has had to do a lot or a little with the cast."

There can be no set pattern for guiding a play to opening night because plays and casts are so uniformly different, as Jim says, "I've directed so many plays and they're all different every night." As a result, there are two pre-requisites for being a good director, or, for that matter a good actor. From his theatrical record, and from personal recommendation, Jim Cameron would seem to have both.

In the first place, he "likes people. I like everybody," he says, paraphrasing an old song, "and that's my cup of tea. Besides it's a lot easier on the stomach muscles." He doesn't think about people in terms of the values they hold but for an intrinsic value in their being the kind of people they are. This kind of attitude in a director or actor enables him to have a wide association of acquaintances on which to build characterizations and plays.

The other attribute a director, particularly, must have is a sensitivity to people. As Jim says, "You have to be sensitive to every person, aware of when they're fumbling, just how far to push them and what their relationship is with the other players." It requires having a concept of a play in mind before production begins, but being able to change that concept to fit the casts' talents. Of course, this is aided by what Cameron calls, with a serious, yet self-mocking flippancy, "one of my most brilliant talents — casting."

Idahoans Go For Dam

More Idahoans favor construction of dams on the middle Snake River than nondevelopment of the area because of no dam construction. So concludes a survey by the Pacific Northwest Power combine, a group of power firms seeking to build dams on the Snake. K. M. Robinson, PNP chairman, said, "To begin with, only one of three Idaho residents wants construction of more dams, while 46 per cent voiced opposition and 22 per cent had no opinion. But, when faced with such alternatives as keeping the middle Snake in a wilderness state and looking at the importance of dams to conserve water for future irrigation, opinion upped those favoring dams to 49 per cent and dropped opposition to 39 per cent. The undecided vote fell to 12 per cent."

Cascadia Dam may be the next bone of contention between environmentalists and dam proponents in Oregon. A handful of Cascadia citizens is petitioning Gov. Tom McCall to investigate turning the upper Sanslam River into a scenic waterway free of additional dam construction.

Fort Yamhill's site in Polk County, encompassing some 54 acres now in private ownership, has been entered in the National Register of Historic Places, reports Rep. Wendell Wyatt, R-Ore. The fort, just north of Valley Junction, was one of four posts built after the Rogue River Indian wars. Its construction was begun by 2nd Lt. William B. Hazen in 1856.

Administrator named for Job Corps centers

Dr Dorothy McArtor Burns, director of the Tongue Point, Ore., Job Corps Center and an educator and public administrator has been named assistant regional manpower administrator of the U. S. Department of Labor for the Job Corps in the four Pacific Northwest states.

She will report Aug 30 in the regional office of the Labor Department's Manpower Administration in the Arcade Plaza, Seattle.

Jess C. Hamaker, regional manpower administrator said Dr Burns will be responsible for operation of the ten Job Corps Centers in the region, as well as for recruitment of Job Corps enrollees in Alaska, Idaho Oregon and Washington. The centers are

Oregon—Residential Manpower Center, Portland; Timberlake Civilian Conservation Center at Ripple Brook near Estacada, Wolf Creek Civilian Conservation Center at Glide, Angell Civilian Conservation Center at Yachats, and the Tongue Point Center at Astoria.

Washington—Fort Simco Civilian Conservation Center, at White Swan near Yakima; Columbia Civilian Conservation Center, at Larsen Air Force Base near Moses Lake, and the Curlew Civilian Conservation Center at Curlew.

Idaho—Marsing Civilian Conservation Center at Marsing, and the Cottonwood Civilian Conservation Center at Cottonwood.

The ten centers have a combined enrollment of about 2560 disadvantaged young men and women.

tion in archery, badminton, basketball, boxing, ping pong, karate, tumbling, volleyball, wrestling, swimming, and weightlifting.

Corpsmen are also starting classes in games new to the center, such as handball, pushball, and sacket.

Handball, not the ball-to-wall variety, is played with a net across the court, explains instructor Jackson.

Sacket is like an indoor version of baseball, except that it is played on a triangular field with only three bases. The catcher catches the ball with a sack.

The pitcher throws a "strike" if the rubber ball hits the sack, but, as in baseball, if it misses the strike zone, it is a "ball."

All the Corpsmen at Breckinridge are required to participate in the physical fitness program which includes rope climbing, situps, leglifts, pushups, chinups, the 50-yard dash, standing broad jump, and shuttle run.

A full card of boxing events takes place at least once a month year-round at the center. Because the sport is so popular with the Corpsmen, plans are underway to hold boxing matches every week.

"Most of the guys who come here can't play sports, but they start off in physical education classes and learn the techniques. Later on, with practice, they may make a few varsity teams," says Corpsman James Washington.

James, who is planning to go on to college when he leaves the center and study to be a physical education instructor, says that Corpsmen who play on the varsity teams are not allowed to compete in intramural sports.

As many as nine intramural basketball games are played each night at the Breckinridge fieldhouse.

The center's varsity basketball team plays local civic teams and in church leagues.

"We have a good team," says James. "When we play pros, we may get beat, but when we play our equals, we sock it to 'em."

Whether winning or losing, teams at Job Corps centers are socking it to lots of other teams in indoor sports this winter.

BLOCK THAT BASKET—A high-flying Breckinridge Corpsman (No. 19) keeps an opponent from scoring during a game between Breckmen and a local church team.

BASKETBALL ACTION—Recently, Guthrie Corpswomen garnered Third Place in the Oklahoma City YWCA Basketball Tournament. Here, Guthrie's No. 41 Wanda Walker, blocks a basket. The Guthrie Corpswomen won the game against the Perkins, Okla., high school team.

"MY FAVORITE SPORT is bowling," says Breckinridge Corpsman Corey Casey (above). Corey says he hopes to continue with the sport after he leaves Breckinridge and gets a job.

BOWLING CITY—Over 150 Guthrie Corpswomen bowl each week in several modern bowling lanes in Oklahoma City.

Job Corps Adviser Asks Community To Help in Showing Girls Area

A Tongue Point Job Corps official asked community help Tuesday night in introducing new corpswomen to the Astoria area.

Sara Meyer, adviser at Bonanza, quarters for incoming corpswomen, asked the help of Astoria-area business persons and residents in meeting new trainees in town and, if possible, guiding them to points of interest. She said the newly arrived women are taken on bus tours of the area, and said it would be helpful if business proprietors would show them around.

"If we build up a dialogue (between the corpswomen and the community) maybe we can bridge some gaps," Miss Meyer said at a quarterly meeting of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council.

Mrs. Helmer Lindstrom, president of the Council, said letters had been sent to many area organizations asking that they include Tongue Point in their meeting plans for the new year. She said she hoped for a good response.

Mrs. Lindstrom said she wished that more residents of the community would visit Tongue Point to meet the girls and see what's going on. She commented on the light turn-out at Tuesday night's program, to which some two area teachers had been invited.

Mrs. Lindstrom said that of the 21 corpswomen who graduated at the most recent graduation ceremony, 14 were headed for college.

Wadell Snyder, acting director of Tongue Point, told Council members that the number of corpswomen who had been quitting the Corps and leaving had been high, but had decreased to the point now where between four and five trainees leave per week.

Jim Cameron, community relations director for the center, asked for ideas on how corpswomen could raise money through various fund-raising projects. He said the Ponderosa Lounge and student government activities used to be financed through fines paid by the girls for breaking regulations. But Cameron said that fine money now has to be sent to Washington, D.C., which leaves the Center with a need to get funds for student activities.

In other comments to the Council, Snyder said Center officials were trying to find more nurses' aide positions in the Astoria area for corpswomen, said buildings in "the Village" - living quarters in the east end of the Center — were being painted and reroofed and said the personnel and payroll offices had taken over the second floor of the Administration Building.

Several corpswomen explained areas of the curriculum in which they were being trained at Tongue Point.

FORWARD, BEND!—No, the Breck Phase III drill team hasn't been stricken with convulsions. They're just obeying a command to "freeze" during an exhibition performance at the Breckinridge, Ky., Job Corps Center for Men.

FIRST PLACE FLOAT trophy in the annual Miss Oregon Pageant Parade went to the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women. The theme of the float was "Let's Get Together." It featured six Corpswomen, each representing a different ethnic group.

DR. DOROTHY BURNS

Dr. BurnsHonored at Job Corps Center

Some 60 Astorians and Job Corps staffers honored Dr. Dorothy Burns Wednesday evening at a dinner at Tongue Point upon her departure as director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center Dr Burns has been named to a Dept of Labor post in Seattle which will have her overseeing Job Corps centers in the Northwest.

Dr Burns who has directed Tongue Point for four years told the audience her work at the Center had been tough at times but rewarding She said the four years had included some failures and some successes and said she hoped there had been more successes

The former California educator said one of her greatest satisfactions at Tongue Point had been the number of fine staff members who had worked there. She had particular praise for Wadell Snyder, assistant director at the Center, saying he had lent a good deal of strength to her work.

Dr. Burns said she had just realized the Seattle position would be the first desk job she had ever had She said that saddened her because she had always enjoyed working directly with youth. In the new post, Dr. Burns will visit the Job Corps centers in the Northwest.

Commenting on the difficulties encountered by a Job Corps center administrator, Dr Burns said If you enjoy working with kids, particularly the ones who need it and you the most, it's worth it She said some of her longtime friends had often wondered why she had stayed with the job of a center director To that, she said if a person "has a heart, I don't see how you can say no." The director said too many persons in schools and other training centers don't care for young persons, and said that was one of the greatest problems in education

Praise of Dr. Burns came from Wadell Snyder; Mayor Harry Steinbock of Astoria; Job Corps Project Manager Benjamin Sanger; W.N McLaughlin, University of Oregon business manager, and Mrs. Helmer Anderson, chairman of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council. Jim Cameron, of the Center's public information office and [illegible] presented humorous readings after the dinner McLaughlin presented to Dr Burns a certificate of Appreciation from the University of Oregon, sent by UO President Robert Clark

Dr Burns said she would be returning to Tongue Point Sept 24- inspecting the Center in her new capacity She said she'd try to be objective but probably find it difficult

McCall seeks early release of inmates

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Every inmate of Oregon prisons, except those serving multiple life sentences, "should be paroled or placed on work-release before his term ends," Gov. Tom McCall says.

In a speech to the Oregon Corrections Association, McCall said inmates given the chance to enter a transitional program are much less likely to return to prison than those who simply serve out their time.

Giving inmates an expectation of ultimate participation in a transitional program also adds to the "climate of hope" that must exist, McCall said.

[illegible] convicted even more inmates would be amenable to changing their life styles, if they know that over-all aspiration—as demonstrated by their conduct, participation in group activities, educational and vocational achievement, and overall cooperation with the staff—assured fair and orderly consideration for a transitional program," the governor said.

Lynn Morey Explains Tongue Point Set-Up

The Astoria Garden Club met recently in the Alderbrook Community Hall and heard a report by Lynn Morey, resident supervisor at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center on center operations

Mrs. Morey told the club 736 women are now enrolled at the center, and that these are students from every state including Hawaii and Alaska. Practically every ethnic and religious group is represented. Differences in religious beliefs, and social backgrounds make it difficult for some students to adjust to life at the center

Corpswomen the resident supervisor explained are offered training in specific job skills, some of which are business clerical hospital, house keeping and food service. They are given the opportunity to finish their formal education, take the GED test and receive a diploma, the equivalent to a high school diploma

Job Corp offers more than training in job skills and formal education, Mrs. Morey said. The program includes the study of ethics, manners, and social attitudes, some of which are promptness, proper dress, cooperation, budgeting, good health attitudes, physical activities, and activities for leisure time

The training period lasts from 6 months to 2 years depending upon the needs of the student, Mrs. Morey explained, and at the end of the training period every effort is made to place the student in a suitable position. Mrs Morey said the aims of the Job Corps are "To give students 'Hope for tomorrow and faith in today'."

In garden club business, it was reported that seven from the Astoria Club had attended the District 7 meeting in Cannon Beach recently and that Mrs. Trygve Tetli's table arrangement for that meeting had been awarded honorable mention

Many members of the Astoria Garden Club than participated in the plant exchange directed by Mrs. Ward Quarles and Mrs. Clifford Driskill.

Snyder Leaves JC Center

The chain of command at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center shifts for the second time this month when Wadell Snyder, acting center director, leaves for graduate work at the University of Oregon today.

Ardis Christensen will serve as the center's acting director effective Monday, until a replacement is found for Dr. Dorthy Burns. Miss Christensen, the center's associate director, education has been acting deputy director under Snyder

Dr Burns left Tongue Point Sept 1 after serving as it director since 1967. At that time she assumed new duties as Asst Regional Manpowe Administrator for the U S Dept of Labor

Snyder arrived at Tongue Point in 1968 as associate director, staff development. In September 1969, he was named deputy director. At the UO, Snyder will work for his doctorate in higher education and administrative personnel

Miss Christensen joined the Tongue Point staff in July 1970 as a counselor. Prior to that, she had served as principal of the Star of the Sea Elementary School. She became associate director for education June 22.

Dr Robert Gilberts Dean of the UO's School of Education who is charged with finding a successor to Dr. Burns, says he expects a new director to be named by Nov. 1. The field of candidates has been narrowed to some six individuals.

Job Corps Gets Good Review

Tongue Point Job Corps Center officials received a "very favorable" report on center operations from the eight-member federal review team which inspected the center last week, according to Ardis Christensen, acting director.

Miss Christensen, who assumed her duties Monday after Wadell Snyder left for graduate work at the University of Oregon, said the federal examiners thought the "library was one of the best in the Job Corps" and commented on the center's "good physical plant."

These remarks came in a debriefing session following the group's inspection of all center activities. Both basic and vocational education, the physical plant, work experience, counseling and recreational activities were examined

The suggestions the team had for improving Tongue Point operations have, according to Miss Christensen, been in areas the center is already working on. These include better coordination of the "world of work" and health programs.

The federal examinations are made annually. The University of Oregon assesses the center's activity three times yearly.

'One of the Best Reporting Systems in the State'

County Tops State in Reported Venereal Disease

Clatsop County has the highest number of reported venereal disease cases in Oregon, according to an Oregon Pharmaceutical Assn. study. And, that report says, Clatsop's venereal disease rate is almost double that of the second place county, Multnomah

As of Friday, the county had recorded 332 cases during 1971, according to Dr. Noel Rawls, Clatsop's Health officer. This is up from 282 for 1970 and from 103 in 1969

Rawls says the number is so high because "we have one of the best reporting systems in the state. The local physicians, Tongue Point and the county health office run a good check, close to 100 per cent."

The Oregon State Board of Health defines venereal diseases as those "passed from person to person by sexual contact." Gonorrhea and syphilis are the two most common forms of venereal disease. But Rawls says, the term VD as applied to Clatsop County means practically totally gonorrhea, a disease which can cause sterility, heart disease, arthritis and even blindness. Contrary to much popular sentiment, VD is transmissible only through sexual contact and not from objects such as toilet seats, doorknobs or eating utensils.

Rawls' figures show that the Tongue Point Job Corps Center accounts for two of every three county VD figures. Dr. Veldon Boge, Tongue Point's associate director for Health Services, says that he doubts "our level is much higher than most of the high schools in the state." But, he says, Tongue Point's rate is high because "we look for it. As far as I know all our cases are reported. I don't think that's true of all the agencies in the county."

Tongue Point, according to Boge, routinely screens incoming corpswomen for VD. This allows medical officials to detect the "silent carrier," the women who is "asymptomatic" and can carry the disease around for a year or more without even knowing she had it."

Women, it seems, rarely have noticeable gonorrhea symptoms. "While a mild pus discharge from the vagina may occur," the State Health Board says, rarely is there burning pain during urination." The latter is a noticeable symptom among men and is accompanied by a pus discharge from the penis.

About 20 per cent of the corpswomen initially tested have VD, about two per cent of the cases tested in the rest of the county register positive, according to Rawls But, Rawls' staff, while it "screens every unmarried girl who comes in for family planning," relies on doctors referrals for the rest of its reporting and does not automatically run screening tests among the county's high school students

Boge says Tongue Point also "follows up on everyone" of the contacts about possible VD carriers sent to them through public health reporting services in Washington and Oregon. The primary contacts for Corpswomen for spreading VD are, Rawls says, the Army's Fort Lewis, near Tacoma, Wash., and visiting seamen Contacts for the rest of the county's VD carriers are, generally, other Clatsop County residents

Both Tongue Point and the County Health Office test for VD by means of a culture technique. Rawls figures that on the culture tests, health officials "miss about 10 per cent of the population," that is find them VD free when, in fact, they have the disease Because of the sheer size of the Job Corps screening operation, their culture samples are sent to a national headquarters in Baltimore for analysis

Both Rawls and Boge see education as the key to reducing the VD problem. But, Rawls says, there is almost no sex education in Oregon And Boge says, "Every step of the way, we try to educate. But the ignorance of teen-age kids in this area is great"

A good protection against veneral disease is a condum or "rubber," although it is not foolproof But a condum worn by the male is the most efficient method of prevention both for males and females Women's contraceptive devices will not prevent VD, according to the Oregon State Board of Health The most "sensible" precaution, the Board says, is "basic hygiene After intercourse, a male should immediately urinate and wash his genital organs thoroughly. A female should give herself a vaginal douche."

According to Rawls, the "ultimate penalty to the individual who has recurring cases of VD is sterility." For Clatsop County as a whole, he says, "VD is costing the county too much in money which could be spent in other health functions." VD detection and treatment in Clatsop County, costs $35,000 a year.

Tongue Point Center

Hunt Continues For JC Director

The number of existing candidates for the post of Tongue Point Job Corps Center director has been narrowed to six but the University of Oregon will "continue screening" new applicants, according to Dr. Robert Gilberts.

Gilberts, dean of the university's College of Education, is the man charged with finding a successor to Dr. Dorothy Burns Center director since 1967. Dr. Burns left Tongue Point Sept 1 to accept a position as assistant regional manpower administrator for the U.S. Dept of Labor. She is now based in Seattle and is in charge of 10 Job Corps Centers throughout the Northwest.

Wadell Snyder, deputy director at Tongue Point, was named acting director. However, he leaves Sept. 24 for doctoral studies at the University of Oregon. Ardis Christiansen, currently associate director for education at the center, will become the acting director after Snyder leaves.

Gilberts does not feel that a new director will be named before Snyder's move. The UO dean puts an "outside date of Nov 1" on naming a new director

Declining to release the names of potential directors, Gilberts said he is hunting for someone who has "both the administrative capabilities to run an operation the size of the center and the personal qualities to be a leader at the center and in the community." Tongue point currently has approximately 750 corpswomen and 245 staff members.

The candidate need not hold a doctorate, thought by some to be a requisite for the post, according to Gilberts. He said he is considering candidates from both on and off the center, from inside and outside Oregon, and has had applications from men, women, minority and majority group members

Gilberts last week ran a preliminary screening of applicants credentials and this week is interviewing six candidates.

The UO College of Education dean recommends a candidate for center director to the president of the University who makes the appointment, which also must be approved by federal authorities. The Tongue Point Center director holds an academic position at the Eugene university

Snyder to Leave Job Corps Center

Wadell Snyder, deputy director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center since September 1969 and currently the center's acting director, leaves Sept 24 for doctoral studies at the University of Oregon

Ardis Christiansen, director of Education, will serve as acting director until a new center head is named

Snyder arrived at Tongue Point in September, 1968, as associate director, Staff Development. Prior to that, he had been a teacher and then principal in schools in Chagrin Falls and Cleveland, Ohio

Snyder will do his doctoral work in higher education and administrative personnel After completing his year's residency requirement in Eugene, he says he will probably re-enter the work force in some sector of the "public sphere dealing with the urban area because I think there's a lot to be offered there," while he finishes his thesis

Eventually, Snyder thinks he might like to get into teaching at a small college

Seaside Chamber Members Introduced To Tongue Point Job Corps Program

SEASIDE — Chamber of Commerce members here became better acquainted with the Tongue Point Job Corps Center through presentations this week by two corpswomen and a staff member

Lillian Martin explained the residential living program, Sandy Fisher talked about study courses, and staff member Lynn Morey spoke on entrance requirements and success rates

Mrs. Morey said some 730 women between the ages of 16 and 22 pursue vocational and academic studies at the center. Those who graduate remain there an average of one year. She asserted that an over-all job placement figure of 80 to 85 per cent indicates the value of the Job Corps program, which is federally funded

Although new corpswomen arrive at Tongue Point in groups of 60 every two weeks, Mrs. Morey said about one-third drop out of the program within the first month. She cited cultural shock, homesickness, family and adjustment problems as major causes of the high attrition rate.

Dormitory living, institutional food, the culture and living pace present in Clatsop County all contribute to "cultural shock" for many corpswomen, she said. Mrs. Morey explained that 70 per cent are black, many are from large metropolitan areas or the deep South; most come from very large families and are not accustomed to a highly structured style of living.

"Some girls come from backgrounds which would make your hair curl," Mrs. Morey said, explaining that adjustment to living with hundreds of young women can be taxing. Family ties are strong, she said, and some corpswomen leave the center in order to care for younger brothers and sisters when they are needed.

With girls of blacks, Caucasians, Mexican Americans, Indians, Eskimoes and Orientals at the center, cultural and ethnic differences are pronounced she said. The center staff attempts to give extra personal attention to the new corpswoman because, "If they make it through the first three months, they'll finish" the program, she said.

Corpswoman Lillian Martin explained that newcomers live in a special "orientation" dorm for their first two weeks at the center and are later transferred to one of four large residential units. New girls are assigned a "big sister" to act as confidant and advisor.

Miss Martin outlined recreational facilities offered at Tongue Point and spelled out clean-up responsibilities shared by all corpswomen. Terming student government there "very effective", she said corpswomen have also participated in community action work, mentioning a litter pick-up drive throughout Clatsop County this summer.

The largest women's job corp facility in the United States, Tongue Point trains women in drafting, business and clerical, food service, institutional management and nurse's aide courses.

Course work is designed to closely simulate actual working conditions, Mrs. Morey said, pointing out that corpswomen and instructors in the food service course prepare and serve all meals at the center cafeteria. Corpswomen in the nursing course complete clinical service in area rest homes, Mrs. Morey said, and women enrolled in the institutional management course operate on base a two-bedroom motel unit which is often used by visiting parents

Corpswoman Sandy Fisher explained that girls lacking a high school diploma may study toward successful completion of a high school equivalency course Other programs offered at the center include physical education, home economics and life skills, the latter covering family management, parental planning and sex education

Receiving certificates for successful completion of their vocational courses, Mrs. Morey said the graduates may go on to college or proceed to their first job. In the latter case, women live at a Job Corps-YWCA institution where room, board and counseling are provided. After two to six months experience there, the young women leave for employment and a life of their own elsewhere

Calling Tongue Point a "total residential program", Mrs Morey said the girls learn how to get along with others, good grooming habits, and other important life skills, such as budgeting and household finances

Tongue Point corpswomen at Chamber forum lunch

Miss Lynn Morey and two Corpswomen from Tongue Point gave the program at the forum luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday noon. The two girls, Lillian Martin and Sandy Fisher, described the life of the Corpswomen as they enter the center near Astoria.

Miss Morey, a former business school administrator, instructor of business education at the center and now on the administrative staff, told of the difficulties the girls encounter as they come to the center. "If they can last 90 days at Tongue Point, we think they have it made," Miss Morey said. "We lose about 35 per cent within the first month and another 35 per cent the next two months The adjustment is just too much for some of them to make. We feel especially sorry for the few Eskimo girls who find their way to Astoria They are used to quiet, and they just can't stand the noise." Sandy Fisher described the educational opportunities offered by the center There are six different courses: drafting, business and clerical, food service, institutional management, nurses aide and the GED program The latter is a program which enables the Corpswomen to obtain a high school diploma

Lillian Martin told about the life for the girls at the center All stay in a separate dorm for two weeks when they first arrive at Astoria, then are moved to one of the four residence dorms The facilities at the center offer many recreational opportunities, according to Miss Martin The girls have an active student government, and the center encourages them to participate in civic campaigns such as the recent roadside litter clean-ups, which were done in conjunction with students at Clatsop College.

After a girl leaves Tongue Point, she spends the rest of her two years in the JCYW program. During this phase of her training, the girl stays at a YWCA and is given a job to provide work experience. After a girl completes this program, she is free to take a job or return to her home.

girl is eligible to stay in Job Corps for two years. "A great number of those going into the JCYW program stay in the cities in which they were assigned and take jobs," Miss Morey said

In other business at the luncheon, Jack Downing of the Boosters reported that the committee had set the date of the Seaside Marathon on February 26 and the Beachcomber Festival on February 18-20, 1972

A Booster committee budget of $16,729 is awaiting Chamber of Commerce board of director approval.

Catholic Daughters Plan Dist. Meet, Have Job Corps Visits

On the advice of the Rev. Charles Bezzo, become more involved in the affairs of their church and their community, members of Catholic Daughters signed up for volunteer work for the dinner and bazaar their parish conducted for the public this past weekend when they met for the Nov. 2 meeting.

Members also showed interest in the announcement by Mrs. Bernard Hunt, worthy regent of Court Columbia Catholic Daughters, that Sister Mary Ann of Star of the Sea school, needs women to accompany her to her regularly scheduled visits to meet with girls of the Job Corps at Tongue Point. Sister and those accompanying her talk with the girls on matters of interest to the young students, and then serve a light refreshment. Those who had previously made the visits found the Job Corps girls eager to talk to outsiders or townspeople, and inspired others to do so also, on the next visit with Sister Mary Ann, November 16.

Also on the calendar is a meeting of the Associated Council of Catholic Women of District 2 to be held in Astoria at Star of the Sea School starting at 10 a.m. Mrs. H. E. Slagle, district president, and Mrs. E. E. Lindsay.

Father Borbo announced that he would say a special mass for those attending the meeting at 12 noon, this to be followed by a sack lunch brought by individual members, to be supplemented by coffee, tea and probably dessert from the local ACCW members. All women of the parish are invited Mrs. Slagle stated.

In the past, it was reported, Catholic Daughters served as hostesses at the senior recreation and meeting room in downtown Astoria, and also purchased items for and filled 10 ditty bags that the Red Cross will mail to servicemen overseas in time for Christmas.

Following the showing of a film on the fight against drug abuse among the young, Mrs. Gordon Breitenbaugh was hostess at the refreshment hour.

Area Merchants Needed for Two-Week Periods

Work Experience Urged for Job Corpswomen

The person in charge of job placement at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center has asked area merchants to consider using corpswomen in their businesses for two-week periods to afford the trainees some work experience.

Placement Manager Ben Sell asked Astorian Kiwanians and others Tuesday to come to the center and talk to him and other staff members about such a program. He said today merchants could not pay corpswomen in such a work-experience program because of restrictions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Sell said such work experience, a few hours a day for two-week periods can be a helpful supplement to their classroom instruction.

He said that he and the supervisors of the various curriculum areas at the Center would oversee the community job placement program. He said some trainees are working in the Coats-Aleutian area.

The six curriculum areas at Tongue Point are: business-clerical, food services, hospitality services, electronics, drafting and health occupations.

Sell explained the Job Corps procedure whereby each corpswoman who completes her academic and vocational training at a center selects one of 18 cities in the country. She then goes to live in the YWCA of the city she chooses and takes a job.

Under the JCYW program, a trainee goes through a two-week orientation in the city she chooses, learning about that city. She then goes into a full-time job, for an average stay of four months with her employer and the YWCA staff counseling her during that time. When the young woman proves out on the job, she is then graduated from the Job Corps. Seventy per cent of the corpswomen working in the JCWY program are hired for permanent work by their employers, Sell said.

The Job Corps official said many of the corpswomen who come from rural areas of the country don't like the bigger cities and return to less populous areas. He said, also, most seem to work for about three months in their JCYW jobs and then go home. For nearly all of them, it's the first time in their lives they've had any success and they apparently want to show the folks back home that they've made it. Sell said they then return to their employers after about six weeks to resume working.

He said some 60 per cent of the girls coming to Tongue Point lived in rural areas with severely limited job opportunities which makes it a problem, he said, for a graduated corpswoman who wants to return home to live.

Sell said he had been alarmed that some young women come to Tongue Point with high school diplomas but only function in reading and other skills at a second or third grade level. He said many of those come from the southeastern United States but said others come from areas outside the Southeast.

He said the Job Corps approach in training the girls is one of success "building blocks": working with them individually so they can learn skills and subjects at their own speeds and abilities, one at a time, thereby giving them confidence as they go.

The placement official said the vast majority of corpswomen have good attitudes, but said the public tends to notice the "five per cent" who act up. He said the Tongue Point staff concentrates a good deal of its attention on the five per cent.

Sell said Tongue Point is assigned some 2,000 trainees a year, but said about one-third leave within 90 days, because of homesickness and other problems. He said many of the girls — blacks, whites, from isolated rural areas and from city ghettoes — find Tongue Point, Astoria and vicinity quite a "shock" as something foreign to them. He added that the rate of girls leaving increases during the next few months, the coldest and wettest in northeastern Oregon.

Sell said the most successful corpswomen are those who have decided to make something of their lives, not those who are urged by law-enforcement people or others to go into Job Corps even though the girl might have little enthusiasm for such a step.

Tongue Point Job Corps Tries Pilot Math Program

The Tongue Point Job Corps Center's 14 basic education teachers introduced a pilot mathematics program for their corpswomen this week. If successful, the program would be inaugurated in the nation's 65 Job Corps Centers next summer.

Tongue Point is one of five Northwest centers experimenting with the new mathematical teaching approach designed by Systems Development Corp., Santa Monica, Calif., under a $170,000 Department of Labor contract. The other participating centers, all in Oregon and Washington, are at Timberlake, Wolf Creek, Columbia Basin, and the Portland Residential Manpower Center. The three-man corporation team monitoring the project will work out of Portland.

The Systems Development math instruction differs substantially from previous program in three areas. Under this approach, each corpswoman will receive a completely new set of tests to monitor her math progress. These will include an initial placement examination. The new program will also stress word problems at all levels more than previous programs in an attempt to simultaneously raise reading and math levels.

A daily speed check of mathematic basics in each of the four operations will include addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. The check is designed as a repetition-memorization device and will be accompanied by incentives to increase ability levels.

Both teachers and students will have a program manual. The corpswomen manual is designed, Systems Development people say, so that "theoretically: the teacher wouldn't have to talk to the student." It's geared to a third grade reading level and starts with the asumption, according to officials, that the corpsmember using it knows nothing about mathematics.

Not in the working-stages yet, but projected for the program are a measurement laboratory and a tutorial program. The measurement lab would help students learn weight and volume calculations. The tutorial program would contain a handbook for teachers on how to train tutors and would include materials tutors could use to teach corpswomen.

Miss Tongue Point Contestants

They Love Tongue Point, But There Are Problems

Gloria Pate — Louisiana Washington — Josie Rios — Johnnie Garrett — Shirley Shivers

They "love Tongue Point." Yet they recognize some of the inconsistencies within the Job Corps Center itself. And they feel, although perhaps they don't understand, the greater irony of placing a black and brown island in a white sea.

The five young women, 17 to 20, who will vie for the Miss Tongue Point title Friday night in a public ceremony in the TP Center Theatre, see black against white prejudice at Tongue Point and deplore it. They see white against black prejudice in Astoria and are hurt by it. They see town against Job Corps prejudice and are confused by it.

Four of the five corpswomen are black, one is chicano. Some 71 per cent of Tongue Point is black, 9 per cent is chicano; 16 per cent is white.

Gloria Pate is from Charlotte, N.C. She's been at the center two months and is a business and clerical student. She's a big girl with a short natural who does a lot of talking, with her hands as well as her mouth.

Louisiana Washington is 18 and from Tampa, Fla. She's quiet, small and takes her black glasses off to make a point. She's also a business and clerical student, and has been on base since June.

Shirley Shivers has spent four months at Tongue Point. Earlier she had spent nine months at the Omaha Job Corps Center. She, too, is a business and clerical student. She's from Toone, Tenn., is a big girl, and speaks with a definite finality.

Josie Rios is short and sports long, streaked blonde-brown hair and glasses. She's a business and clerical student, but may switch to health occupations and is from Bell Gardens, Calif., a Los Angeles suburb.

The five came to Tongue Point for a variety of reasons. Josie "was just hanging around the house. Mother wouldn't let my older sister come. She wanted me to come."

Josie went to public schools until the seventh grade. Her mother put her in a convent school through ninth grade. In her sophomore year, she was in a public school but dropped out at semester because of "the boys. I wasn't used to them." She tried the public system again in her junior year, dropped out at the semester break, held a job for 10 days and "quit before they fired me." She wants to get her GED. The GED is a high school equivalency diploma which drop-outs can get instead of a high school diploma.

For Gloria Pate and Johnnie Garrett, Tongue Point was the "last chance."

Gloria had never completed anything. Motherless at two, she was raised by a grandmother who spoiled her until, she was eight and then tried to reverse the process. Gloria "rebelled. You get a big head at that age," she said. She dropped out of school in the eighth grade, then "knocked around until I was 16, and I got pregnant and grandmother loved my son to death." She went to night school, got bored with it because it was a repeat of her already limited education, quit, got married.

The marriage failed. She wanted to continue her education but "I didn't want to go back to high school. Those little kids scared me to death." So she came to Job Corps. She's in the GED program, wants to go to college and become a counselor.

Johnnie Garrett wanted to finish school, but couldn't. Her mother had a nervous breakdown, and she had brothers and sisters in school. The housework she had been doing summers since ther 12th birthday came in handy then. When she could, she went down to the employment office and told the man she wanted the first plane out of Birmingham to any Job Corps center.

Lou Washington's decision wasn't quite that desperate. After graduating from high school in May, she followed her older sister's footsteps to Tongue Point. Her sister, Lizzie Washington, graduated from Tongue Point two years ago, is now working as a Residence Advisor in the Village and going to Clatsop Community College. Louisiana thinks she might like to go to college, maybe become a counselor, because "I like to help people."

Shirley Shivers doesn't want to go to college. In fact, that's part of the reason why she came to Job Corps. What she wants to do is run her own business. "I don't like being the assistant too much. If I can't be the boss, I don't want to do it." She's at Tongue Point to brush up on the skills she learned at Omaha so she can start her own business.

The girls came to the Tongue Point Job Corps Center with different objectives in mind. They'll leave with different assessments of the value of their stay.

In between they've formed some fairly common impressions about the center and the town.

The don't think Astoria likes them. They're hurt by that. They know they're watched in stores to make sure they don't shoplift.

That "hurts" Josie. It "hurts" Gloria's feelings. "You reach the point where you're afraid to pick up anything and look at it," the North Carolinan said while others nodded agreement. "I go to an exaggerated effort to make people aware that I'm just looking at something. I keep practically everything I hold about six inches from my body so they can see I'm not stealing," she continued.

Actually, she and Shirley Shivers added, it would be easy to organize a shoplifting gang if anybody wanted. All they'd have to do, they say, is enlist a white girl to take items while the storeowners and clerks are following the black and chicano corpswomen around the store.

They know that all corpswomen are not angels, or honest. But the townspeople, they say "give us a bad name because of the few girls who do take things." The same thing, they say, happens with the staff. Gloria says, "I can see the staff thing. The girls who do steal mess us up by making the staff think we all might."

The quintet of Miss Tongue Point hopefuls doesn't have the answer for squelching what corpswomen stealing there is. But they're determined not to steal themselves. "When you don't do it," Shirley Shivers comments, "it's more of a shock to them." "What the shopkeepers don't realize," Gloria Pate says, "is I'm afraid to even look at something."

The anti-minority relations which the corpswomen say they feel in Astoria are sometimes reversed at Tongue Point itself. There, this country's largest minority, the blacks, becomes the majority and the whites become the minority. It's an awakening jolt for the whites. It can be a heady situation for the blacks, especially because "now the people feel more confidence," Shirley Shivers says.

The blacks, Gloria Pate said, say "identify with your own people." While she doesn't condone the black-white prejudice, and the other Miss Tongue Point hopefuls agreed with her, she feels it follows a predictable cycle. "The first time a person gets his freedom, he overdoes it. We'll be brothers and sisters once we like ourselves."

In the meantime, Tennesseean Shivers admonishes her fellow blacks who might practice reverse prejudice to "think back and remember what prejudice is like. Don't turn around and try to get prejudice yourself."

How does prejudice feel? "It hurts," the girls say. "Sometimes you think you're almost making it and then somebody puts you down again."

The Tongue Point staff members generally try to keep a girl from feeling "put down." It can be hard, partly because of the attitude some of the girls bring with them.

"A lot of the girls come here looking for escape. They want to get away from home. When they realize they have rules, many girls want to leave," Johnnie Garrett said, and added "A girl who comes here is used to running wild."

What the girl's got to do, she said, is look at Job Corps "like a job."

"At a place like this," Gloria expanded, "you have to know you want it. You have to sacrifice a lot of things to get what you want."

For Johnnie, it's a matter of "caring what you're going to do the rest of your life."

That's one reason all the Miss Tongue Point candidates like to talk to the new girls, to try to help the girls put their lives into perspective. These oldtimers know that, as Gloria says, "A lot of the girls are so disappointed when they come through the gate and they feel it's a prison. They don't realize the gate is for their own protection."

They're disappointed, these five new corpswomen comrades feel, partly because many of them come too young. Everyone but Josie, who's just 17 herself, felt the Job Corps entrance age should be older than the 16 it now is. They also feel that the WICS screeners, the people who pick the Job Corps candidates, should have a better idea of just what the centers are like, so they won't have the girls primed for something that doesn't exist.

The newcomers also have to combat homesickness. So do some of the more seasoned corpswomen, like the Miss Tongue Point candidates. They find trying to ease their fellow corpswomen's homesickness helps them.

The staff, too, Gloria says, understands the homesickness problem and tries to alleviate it by providing plenty of activities for the corpswomen. A lot of the girls don't appreciate this gesture, though, Gloria says, because they think they have to participate in everything, "but the girls don't have to do it."

A corpswoman's beginning in class can be hard, too, the girls commented, because the "staff look at you as a new group. You can tell on the evaluations. It takes about two weeks, or until a new input comes in," for them to begin to see individuals, Gloria remarked. And Shirley added, "You have to be on your toes if you want to be an individual" at Tongue Point, just like anywhere else.

But when it comes down to it, when these Tongue Pointers think about leaving or talk to other, newer corpswomen who plan to resign, they keep one thought in mind. Gloria always asks, "Why go home? You came here looking for something. Why go home?"

Johnnie never even had to ask that question. "I haven't regretted coming to Tongue Point, and I really learned a whole lot from it."

Friday night, beginning at 7:30, one of the girls will be on her way to becoming Miss Tongue Point. During the six months of her reign, she'll be telling people what life at TP is like.

Court rule favors school position

The Oregon Court of Appeals ruled today that State Labor Commissioner Norman O. Nilsen does not have jurisdiction to review the Portland School District's hiring practices since 1941.

Nilsen and Atty. Gen. Lee Johnson sought to force the Portland School Board to produce all pertinent records since 1941 in connection with a black teacher's complaint that failure to promote her in 1969 to an administrative or supervisory job constituted racial discrimination.

The teacher, A. Ruth Spencer, had taught in Portland schools for 23 years.

The school board said that to produce all of its records since 1941 would cause irreparable injury to administration, since the records would have to be removed to Salem.

In another decision, the Appeals Court affirmed a Linn County decision holding valid two City of Albany ordinances imposing a connection charge schedule for the city's sewage disposal system.

David Hayes sued the city, claiming the charge was not just and equitable.

Another decision held that the State Board of Higher Education had authority to fire Betty Phillips, an employe at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, on grounds she was verbally abusive to fellow employes.

The Appeals Court also ruled that several Washington County ordinances to coordinate county-wide waste disposal are valid. The ordinances let the county commissioners grant certificates for waste collection and disposal.

JC Firing Upheld

SALEM — The Oregon Court of Appeals has ruled that the State Board of Higher Education had the authority to fire Betty Phillips an employe at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, on grounds she was verbally abusive to fellow employes.

Ms. Phillips, a former Warrenton resident, joined the Tongue Point staff as a cook in April 1965. She was fired sometime around January 1971, according to Community Services Director James Cameron, then re-instated around February 1971, on orders from the State Public Employe Relations Board. That was reversed by the Lane County Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals.

Trip to Hawaii termed eventful

Lana Lannigan returned Monday from a very eventful week in Hawaii. She arrived in Honolulu October 1- and was met by WICS (Women In Community Service) representatives. She attended meetings of WICS, making a presentation about the program offered the Job Corps trainees at Tongue Point. She particularly stressed the type of girl they can help at Tongue Point.

Tuesday evening was spent in touring the main of Hawaii. The visitor went to Pearl Harbor and to the Polynesian Center, where they watched demonstrations of making leis and weaving hats. They attended a program of all the Polynesian dances. A Samoan woman was with them to explain the meaning of each dance.

Wednesday was spent on the island of Kawaii, visiting with WICS representatives. Thursday was spent in getting acquainted with the island and finding out how the people live, as many of the Job Corps women are from this island. Mrs. Lannigan was in the city of Hanalei, where the movie "Mutiny on the Bounty" was filmed. She visited several plantations, noting the way the people live there. Hawaii is the third largest island in the group but is very rural. It is called the Garden Island. It is the only island other than Hawaii on which beef cattle are raised. In the evening the feature was a torchlight parade. This consists of two men carrying lighted torches and a singer and a conch-shell player.

On Friday she flew to Hilo on the island of Oahu. Here she made a presentation to the Community Aide Program representatives. Using slides, she showed what it was like at Tongue Point from the time a girl entered until she graduated and left the area. She also showed [illegible] surrounding area. She was taken on a tour of the island, visiting a macadamia nut and [illegible] plantation. Most of the roads are [illegible] to the sea, also were closed [illegible] five to six feet of [illegible]. 'Miss Tongue Point' Gloria Pate

N. Carolinan Reigns Over Tongue Point

In the end, the girls surged forward, grasping at the folds of her sunset red gown as she strode down the runway, hoping to absorb the quiet confidence and pride, the achievement of her triumph.

It was Friday night, and Gloria Pate had just been crowned Miss Tongue Point.

The 20-year-old business and clerical student from Charlotte, N.C., defeated four other contestants in her bid to tell the Tongue Point story. The Miss TP candidates were judged on poise, personality, appearance and speaking ability.

Miss Pate, in a speech which was part of the pageant requirements, said that she "came to Tongue Point with the hope of making a contribution to society." She feels that many of today's problems are caused by a lack of communication and that "if we reach the point where we can communicate, we can move toward a more harmonious world."

The other contestants were Josie Rios, Bell Gardens, Calif., first runner-up, Shirley Shivers, Toone, Tenn., second runner-up, Johnnie Garrett, Birmingham, Ala. third runner-up, and Louisiana Washington, Tampa, Fla., fourth runner-up.

Astoria Job Corps Director Sought

The University of Oregon's College of Education and the national Job Corps are still looking for a director for Astoria's Tongue Point Job Corps Center. But according to UO Dean Robert Gilbert, a new director will be named within "the next couple of weeks."

The directorship was vacated Sept. 1, when Dr. Dorothy Burns began her duties as assistant Regional Manpower administrator for the U.S. Dept of Labor. She is based in Seattle. At that time Wadell Snyder, then deputy director was named acting director and Ardis Christensen, associate director for education moved into the deputy director's slot.

Snyder left the Center Sept. 24 to begin doctoral work at the University of Oregon. At that time Miss Christensen was named acting director.

What about OSEA?

To the Editor: John Guernsey's article, "Unions woo college faculties in campus power fight" in the Nov. 24 Oregonian, was extremely timely and interesting. However, I was amazed at the subtitle "No action yet in Oregon." It was astounding that he evidently did not know that there already has been a collective bargaining contract worked out between the academic faculty at Tongue Point and the University of Oregon which was signed by President Clark on Oct. 15, 1971. There has been action in Oregon.

It also was astonishing that Mr. Guernsey did not mention the Oregon State Employees Association in his article when he wrote about college faculty "voices." OSEA was the elected bargaining agent for the faculty group at Tongue Point as it is for most state agency groups. The OSEA academic faculty chapter at Oregon State University has over 700 members, at times the number belonging to AAUP which was the only established group noted in Mr. Guernsey's article. He certainly should contact Mr. Tom Enright at the Headquarters of the Oregon State Employees Association in Salem to learn about both the collective bargaining, which is already an accomplished fact, and the academic faculty chapters of the organization which are found on all Oregon state campuses.

I might add that in the East (New York and New Jersey) there also are independent bargaining agents similar to OSEA being used by higher education faculties. The National Education [illegible] is [illegible] American [illegible] AFL-CIO [illegible] is not a [illegible] used [illegible] bargaining.

Tongue Point Tries New Orientation

New Tongue Point 'Input' Finishes Daily Astorian Tour

Tongue Point has changed its orientation program.

Corpswomen now begin their classes within five days after they arrive on base rather than 10. The purpose of this change and others, according to Sarah Meyer, the senior Resident Advisor for the orientation dorm, is "to get the girls into the program earlier and give them the feeling they're doing something with some success."

Ms Meyer and Tongue Point officials hope the change will help "reduce severences," in part, by providing the corpswomen with more staff members to relate to.

A new "input" of corpswomen arrives at Tongue Point every other Wednesday evening. The "input" can number from 40 to 110, but averages about 65 or 70 girls each time. The corpswomen come from great distances, mostly from the south and southwest. They are young, and they can get homesick fast if they are left to their own devices in a strange territory.

The new schedule will involve the corpswomen into the program almost immediately. The C-W arrives Wednesday, spends Thursday and Friday in intensive screening processes, academic and physical testing, a basic tour of the center, talks with Tongue Point's security force, discussions of the rules and educational programs.

The next Monday she will enter the vocational education programs; on Tuesday, she will enter basic education programs. Both of these will be on a part-time basis for the first week while corpswomen take tours of Astoria and more tests. On their second Friday at Tongue Point, the corpswomen will be assigned to their permanent residences.

Then they begin the process of becoming a full-time Tongue Point Job Corps Woman.

...the Editor: This is to register ...e amazement regarding the content ... Mr. Guernsey's article on university ...d college faculty representation in ...the Nov. 24 issue of The Oregonian.

The article begins with the statement that "for many years the American Association of University Professors has been the uncontested voice for Ore... ...members ..." It goes on to discuss the growing interest among faculty members in collective bargaining and the possibility of the National Education Association or the American Federation of Teachers challenging AAUP's alleged top position.

While there probably is some validity in Mr. Guernsey's report regarding the private universities and colleges, the far greater number of faculty are employed by the state supported schools. About the state of organization of this great majority of higher education academic personnel, he appears to be surprisingly uninformed.

While there are a few hundred AAUP members and a handful of NEA and AFT members in the Oregon State System of Higher Education, 1,500 of these academic employes are members of and are represented in their employment relations by the Oregon State Employes Association (OSEA).

OSEA is the voice of the academic (state) employes at the Legislature; its professional staff members attend every meeting of the State Board of Higher Education and its committees and ... Tongue Point Job Corps Center in Astoria it recently executed the first collective bargaining contract west of the Mississippi covering higher education faculty members.

There is a substantial interest in collective bargaining among faculty in the state-supported universities and colleges. OSEA has broken the ground and is blazing the trail to the future. We will make it a point to keep The Oregonian informed.

CORPSWOMEN ENJOY an evening at the theater, especially when they can watch a fellow Tongue Point Corpswoman, Chris Ellis, in one of the leading roles. Chris was the only Tongue Point enrollee who acted in the play, but other girls ushered and helped out backstage.

TONGUE POINT, Oreg. —Tongue Point Corpswoman Chris Ellis recently celebrated an unusual 17th birthday—on stage in a community production of Gore Vidal's play, "A Visit to a Small Planet."

Chris, who just finished her training in electronics assembly and is now completing work for her GED, played the daughter of Roger and Reba Spelding.

The play tells the story of Kreton, a gentleman from outer space who decides to visit the planet Earth.

Kreton would like to take a look at the Civil War, but he makes a few miscalculations and arrives in the backyard of Roger Spelding's home in Washington, D.C.—over 100 years too late.

The community project also involved a number of Tongue Point staff members. GED instructor Joanna Lofgren directed the play. Supervisor of food and hospitality services Bud Gavino played Chris's father, Roger Spelding, and basic education sewing instructor Helen Pitkanen played Chris's mother, Reba Spelding.

In the play, Kreton brings his friend Rosemary with him, and this part required special casting. Rosemary is a cat. Tongue Point's Residence 4 mascot —Cornflakes—got the part.

After the opening night, cast members gave a party for Chris and presented her with a dozen yellow roses.

"It was really far out," says Chris, recalling the party.

Chris, who had never been on stage before, said, "It was a great experience for me. I met a lot of good people."

Chris described what going on stage for the first time was like.

"You are backstage and it is really scary. But once you go on, you get a feel of the audience. If they react to you, you can react to them."

About her theatrical career, Chris says she's not interested in doing any more plays in the near future.

"It was really a big thing. It was hard learning all those lines. So I'm resting now," she says.

Her future plans include attending the University of Nebraska this fall. She says she likes to work with people and is considering a career as a social worker or a parole officer.

Chris found out about Job Corps through a friend who had enrolled as a Corpswoman at Excelsior Springs (Mo.) Jobs Corps for Women.

"I was really down and out and my girl friend turned me on to Job Corps. She said, 'It's rough, but if you can handle it, it's worth it.'"

Chris joined Job Corps and has found out that what her friend said was true.

"The Tongue Point Center is great. You run into lots of different people and the staff really cares. You can work for what you want," she says.

Job Corps Is Ecology-Minded

Job Corps centers all over are getting in on the clean-up campaign. At the New Jersey RMC, Corpsmen collect trash and bottles weekly for recycling. At the Excelsior Springs, Mo., Women's Center and the Gary, Tex., Men's Center, Corpsmembers have joined with local residents and high school students for clean-up days.

Ecology - mindedness shows up in other ways, too. The following editorial by Corpswoman Angel Amos appeared in the T.P. Tak, the Tongue Point, Oreg., Women's Center's Student Government newspaper:

S.O.S.

I'm scared. To death! Everyone living today in this place we call earth, in this mound of trash and evil-smelling gases with which we have surrounded ourselves, should be just as scared as I am.

Our world, our environment, is polluted with trash, wastes, and chemicals; and if it's not cleared up soon, no one will be around any more to be scared!

There was an experiment done with two fruit flies. They were put in a jar with a lot of food and space, but it was limited, just as our food and space are limited. And do you know what happened? The flies increased to a balance point and leveled off, then started to decrease rapidly, until finally there were no flies left alive. This process took 30 days. They died of their own wastes. And it is happening to us.

If you care whether you live or die; whether your children will have a safe world to grow up in; whether they can breathe without using an oxygen tank, then help fight pollution. Be an ecology-minded person. People are dying right now—in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago. And all over the rest of the world. Let's stop it!

—Angel Amos

Memorial Service Set For Burns

Burns, whose wife, Dr. Dorothy Burns, is a past director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center, lived in Astoria from 1967 to 1971.

GREEN IS IT!

Joe Sanchez, Corpsman at the Phoenix, Ariz., Residential Manpower Center wrote the following poem about ecology, and David Kempton, also at Phoenix, illustrated it. These appeared in The Second Chance, the Phoenix Student Government newspaper:

Green is it!
Life will it sustain.
Rivers do they flow.
Air is it!
Do you know?
Food—eat it.
Sure you can!
But as time goes on will you still be, man?
Birds, our animals, they all die.
Do you think that they all lie?
But deaf and blind
we seem to be.
As time goes on someone will see.
Yes, time will tell;
this we know.
Yes, time will tell,
but "who" will know?

Job Corps Has 42 Winners In Second Talent Contest

Grand finalist winners in the Second All Job Corps Entertainment Contest have been announced. The contest was planned so that CCC men competed only against each other and all other Corpsmembers (at men's and women's centers and RMC's and RSC's) competed against one another.

Civilian conservation center results are listed first. There were CCC winners in four categories.

The Great Onyx, Ky., CCC specialty group won top honors. The members are Dave Hollins, Frank Hart, Paul Walden, and Sam Adger.

Urban/RMC winners are at six centers and in nine categories.

The Jersey City, N.J., Women Center boasts four winning entries. Wilhemina Bell and Geneva Turner are winners of the specialty group category, with Sarah Jones as the best solo singer of semiclassical music. The Jersey City vocal group winners are Catherine DuBois, Geneva Holt, and Mae Reather O'Neal. Small chorus winners at Jersey City are Rita Tunctson, Chelsea Morris, Dorothy Ford, Priscilla Robinson, Pauline Thornton, Geneva Holt, Merlinda Berry, Mary Parks, Mae Reather O'Neal, Robyn Thompson, Catherine DuBois, Yvonne Hart, Sarah Jones, and Gladys Watson.

ANNIE RUTH HAWTHORNE, individual specialty winner for Los Angeles Women's Center.

Ambitious Winner

College degrees in both nursing and speech/drama and the opportunity to teach are the eventual goals of Annie Ruth Hawthorne (above), Los Angeles Women's Center Corpswoman, who won in the urban/RMC individual specialty category.

Annie, who is now working to complete the licensed vocational nursing course at the California center, won the national competition with her reading of an Edgar Guest poem and Arnold Kemp's "The End of the World."

Asked when she first became interested in dramatics, Annie laughed and replied, "I've been acting a fool since birth."

In her elementary and high school days in Bogalusa, La., she participated in all of the school plays. In the sixth grade, she wrote a play about black cowboys.

"I couldn't understand why there weren't any black cowboys. So I just wrote a play!"

Annie says about Job Corps, "It's a good opportunity, but you shouldn't join unless you have inward determination."

After graduation, Annie wants to return to Lexington, Ky., where she lived just before joining Job Corps. She hopes to work at the University of Kentucky Medical Center and, later, to enroll in school to begin working on those degrees.

Vernette Washington Takes Another Giant Step

It was a giant step from South Carolina to the Tongue Point, Oreg., Women's Center for a 17-year-old, but for Vernette Washington it was the shortest route to an exciting job. Vernette, who until recently worked at Job Corps Headquarters in Washington, D.C., is now a secretary in the office of the director of the new Public Employment Program.

Vernette left Tongue Point to join the Washington JC/YWCA program. The "Y" placed her in the office of the director of Job Corps, then William Mirengoff, for her work experience. She worked out so well, Mirengoff hired her as a regular employee. Recently, her boss was made director of the Public Employment Program and Vernette transferred to the new program too.

The life of a bachelor girl appeals to Vernette. She says she is not looking for a husband and married life right now. She wants to enjoy Washington and her hobbies — sewing, listening to music, and dancing.

FROM JOB CORPS HEADQUARTERS to the office of the director of the new Public Employment Program is just the latest in a series of giant steps for ex-Corpswoman Vernette Washington, secretary.

IT MAY NOT MAKE THE TOP 10, BUT...

To test these instructions, we borrowed three lines from Tongue Point Corpswoman Angel Amos' poem, which appeared in the T.P. Tak, and "hummed up" at melody for them.

We found that our greatest problem with the melody was not finding one, but maintaining it. It kept changing. At one point, we had three melodies going. This was a revelation—we had always wondered how songwriters come up with new tunes. The fact is, once you get started, more keep coming.

The song kept looking more and more like a ballad, so we decided it needed a ba-boom, ba-boom beat in the bass clef. To make sure the beat came on the second note in the five-note measures, we used a quarter-note rest and extended the half notes to three beats. We did this by putting dots beside the half notes. That took a little research in a music book—but it seems that a dot beside a note extends the beat half-again as long.

While we were reading the music book, we found a solution to another problem. We got stuck on the third line with "Oh God, I love you," but took care of it with a "triplet." That's where three notes get one beat or count, like the quarter note.

The song turned out sounding a little sad, sort of country and western rather than rock 'n' roll. But a solid beat would help. In fact, it is at this point that the performer takes over and turns the basic song into a new "sound."

Well, it will not make the top 10, but it was fun. And thanks, Angel Amos, for the use of your fine poem.

Local Employment Trainee Enters Oregon Job Corps Vocation Center

Mary Jane Kennison, one of two girls to be the first girls to enter Job Corps from the Magic Valley area since 1966, enrolled in the Tongue Point Job Corps center for women in Astoria, Oregon. The center offers young women an opportunity to acquire the basic education, vocational skills and social knowhow to live as productive, self-supporting members of their community. It is operated by the University of Oregon under contract to the Department of Labor, Manpower Administration.

There are 730 students at Tongue Point. Mary Jane will live in the Orientation dorm for her initial two-week period. During this time she will be given academic and physical evaluations. Each of the vocational training areas has an academic entrance level and an exit level which must be reached before the student is qualified for graduation. The amount of time needed to complete a program is dependent upon the motivation of the student. Each class is designed to allow the student to work at her own speed.

The Tongue Point center offers courses in business-clerical; health occupations; electronic assembly; hospitality services; food services and drafting. There are short four week courses in a variety of subjects including grooming, drama, music, crafts, bowling, roller skating, etc. Students take two of these a week for the first 12 weeks and elect to take others during their stay.

The Corpswomen must attain the level in reading and mathematics that has been established for her skill area before she is eligible for graduation. She must take required hours of physical education and complete the basic education course in life skills. Elective courses in sewing and cooking are also available. The Job Corps also makes it possible for the high school drop-out to obtain a high school diploma equivalency certificate.

Recreation activities include picnics, camping trips and parties held at the mountain beach facilities. Dances are also held. Other coed activities with the men's centers are planned throughout the year.

Graduation

Graduation indicates the successful completion of the work in basic education and in vocational training with one more step before her job corps training is finished. From the center, the girl may transfer to a JCYW of her choice. Here she will be placed on a job and live in the YWCA where she will receive counseling in making adjustments to the world of work.

The Job Corps were established for young men and women who want a good job but do not have the training or education to get it. They will help these young people to find a job after they finish their training. To join a boy or girl must be at least 16 but not yet 22 years of age. Further information may be obtained at the employment office.

Rights and Justice

"Equality — a Divine Standard," will be the theme for a symposium on human rights to be held at Clatsop College Friday from 1-3 p.m. in Patriot Hall, room 322.

A panel consisting of students and a member of the Clatsop College faculty will discuss human rights, social justice and the oneness of mankind. On the panel will be Eric Boe, Clatsop College student from Redsport; Liz Washington, resident advisor at Tongue Point Job Corps and a student at Clatsop College; Brad Eaton, former Clatsop College student now residing in Portland and Mary Gabriel, faculty member.

This meeting, sponsored by the Baha'i communities of Astoria and Clatsop County, will commemorate the 23rd anniversary of Human Rights Day and will honor the year 1971 as the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination as set aside by the United Nations General Assembly.

The session is free and open to the public.

President

The Rev. Richard Sutton, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Astoria, was elected president Tuesday night of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council. He will succeed, on Jan. 1, Mrs. Helmer Lindstrom. Other new officers: the Rev. Robert Haworth, Astoria, vice president; Mrs. A. P. (Doris) Miller, Astoria, secretary; and executive committee members, Ed Blodgett, safety and security director at Tongue Point; the Rev. Randy Olson, Seaside; Mrs. Wayne (Blanche) Flues, Astoria, and Mrs. Lindstrom.

Talk Sessions Tackle Job Corps—Astoria Gap

Tongue Point corpswomen and residents of Astoria have begun what they plan to be a series of talk sessions aimed at improving relations between the two groups.

Talking in small group sessions Tuesday night, members of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council and some young women from the center discussed how to bridge the gulf between Astorians and students at Tongue Point.

Among suggestions made to improve relations: have more community dances or other entertainment where corpswomen and Astoria young persons could come together; corpswomen taking the initiative and showing friendship to Astorians who may be reluctant to communicate with corpswomen; a radio program in which Tongue Point students could talk about their activities and Astoria, and residents inviting Tongue Point girls into their homes from time to time.

Gloria Pate, recently elected Miss Tongue Point, remarked that it would be helpful if some Astoria stores stocked cosmetics for black persons as they are difficult to get, she said.

It was suggested that another evening of talking be held soon with high school and college students invited to take part.

On other topics, acting Tongue Point Director Ardis Christiansen said she didn't know when the Department of Labor and the University of Oregon would get around to naming a successor to Dr. Dorothy Burns as center director. Miss Christiansen was named acting director after Dr. Burns was selected for a regional Job Corps post in Seattle.

The acting director said she thought that the Tongue Point staff, among which there was a high turn-over rate during the summer, had "stabilized" to quite an extent.

She said the turn-over rate of corpswomen continued to be of great concern to her and the staff. She said there was no "magic potion" for curing homesickness or for the discovery by a trainee that "This isn't where I want to be."

Miss Christiansen said alcohol seemed a greater problem than drugs at Tongue Point. "Drugs are a problem, but not to the extent that we are that concerned about it," she said. She said a Drug Abuse Council was functioning, and had gotten into some non-drug areas such as ethnic differences.

The director also said the center had contracted with an optometrist, which she said was a benefit to the corpswomen, and said a federal team was now making a regular audit of Tongue Point's financial records.

The new director of Tongue Point student government, Ida Mae James, of Demopolis, Ala., said the student government needed badly some suggestions for raising money to support the Ponderosa recreation lounge at the center.

Miss James said that among the student government's projects were: orienting new trainees, trying to improve the residence halls, finding sponsors for the Miss Tongue Point Pageant, improving relations with Astorians and helping financially in such cases as a corpswoman needing money for filing an application for a scholarship.

Ardis Christiansen said the center always has need of Astorians to help chaperone corpswoman events and trips. Persons should call Jim Cameron, director of community relations, at Tongue Point if interested.

Monday, Dec. 20, is the date for a Christmas dinner and variety show. As was the case last year, staff members will serve the dinner and then put on skits at the variety show.

Job Corps Instructor Observes Program

Tongue Point Job Corps instructor Wyonne Barrett is in Excelsior Springs, Mo., through Wednesday examining the business and clerical (B&C) program at the Excelsior Springs Job Corps Center.

Ms. Barrett is the senior instructor in Tongue Point's F&C department of the center's vocational education program. Recently Tongue Point switched its B&C vo-ed teaching teachnique from a self-contained to a departmentalized class structure.

In the self-contained classroom, a corpswoman received all her business and clerical training from one instructor. In the departmentalized system, girls receive instruction in typing, filing, record keeping, business correspondence, business machines, telephone proceedures, job interviews, grooming and the like from different instructors. Shorthand has recently been added to the course as an elective. The departmentalized approach is more like a regular high school program.

Job Corps post given Californian

Raymond E. McDonald, head of an employment training center for disadvantaged persons in Madera, Calif., has been named director of the Tongue Point Job Corps Center for Women at Astoria.

McDonald, 45, will begin work at Tongue Point in the first week of January, and will receive an annual salary of $24,-500.

Christensen in post

The position has been held temporarily by Ardis Christensen, educational division head, since last August, when Dorothy Burns resigned to become an administrator for Job Corps programs in the four northwest states. Mrs. Burns' salary was $27,500 when she resigned.

The appointment was announced Monday by Robert Gilberts, dean of the College of Education at the University of Oregon, which has operated the center since 1967 under a contract with the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

The incoming director will be responsible for the general and vocational education program for the 730 women stationed year-round at Tongue Point.

The center employs about 250 persons and is designed to help young women from disadvantaged backgrounds achieve the educational, vocational and social skills to become independent and self-supporting.

'Excellent program'

McDonald, who has six years of experience with Job Corps programs, said Monday the Tongue Point Center has "an excellent program and has been effective" in its job placement efforts.

He was director of the Job Corps Center in Excelsior Springs, Mo., from 1966 to early this year, and previously spent 10 years as a labor relations director for Avco corp. in Massachusetts. McDonald, who is married and has three children, is a graduate of St. Basil's College in Stanford, Conn., and has completed graduate work in communications, labor law and personnel management.

He became director of the Madera Employment Training Center last spring.

Friendship

Once again, residents interested in bringing the community and the Tongue Point Job Corps Center closer should consider extending a hand of friendship to corpswomen. Either through visiting the Center or inviting a couple of the young women to a party or program or into a home.

Discussion at a recent meeting of the Tongue Point Community Relations Council concluded that the two groups — permanent residents and corpswomen — could get along better if they knew each other better.

It sounds simple, but it seems difficult. People are reluctant to express friendship or a desire for friendship in unusual circumstances. It takes little effort, though, and pays rewards. New friendships, especially with those to whom we aren't accustomed, are mutually beneficial. And one can't get to know someone else without trying. There's no other way.

Tongue Point always has need of volunteers to chaperone events or help out on various projects, too. But the main good is in personal relationships, especially during a time like the Christmas season.

If interested, call or see Jim Cameron, community relations office, Tongue Point.

Job Corps official paints rosy picture for NW area

IN OREGON, five Job Corps centers currently are operating, in Portland, Estacada, Glide, Yachats, and at Tongue Point near Astoria.

Portland's co-educational Residential Manpower Center operates at three locations. One is in the Columbia River Gorge, where the Springdale campus occupies the former St. Francis Seminary site. Another is the main administration building, in the old Multnomah College at SW 10th Avenue and Salmon Street.

The third is a women's residence as Victoria Hall, on SW 10th Avenue near the main library building.

At Tongue Point 730 girls are enrolled. The center was established as a male Job Corps site in 1965 and switched to female occupancy about 1967.

At Estacada the Timber Lake Conservation Center has 224 male enrollees. There are also 224 males participating in the Wolf Creek Conservation Center program at Glide. The Angel Conservation Center at Yachats has 184 male enrollees.

Three Oregon Job Corps centers have been closed in recent years. The Fort Vannoy Center at Grants Pass, with a capacity of 224 males, was closed in 1968, the Tillamook Conservation Center, with 224 male enrollees, closed in 1969, and the Burns Conservation Center, 224 males, closed in 1969.

Don Buchannon, chief of Region 10 training centers management, said in Seattle that "The trend right now is development of residential manpower centers. These are developed in urban areas and their primary purpose is to recruit locally and train locally for labor market needs, and to place locally.

"So far as we're concerned," Buchannon said, "the future looks very good. We see no cutbacks ahead. During the past year we've increased the capacity at our Angel Center from 128 to 184, and we're currently negotiating a new contract for Portland — to increase capacity from 225 to 275."

Job Corps—A Key to Survival

BY JUDI MODIE

Mary Quintela wouldn't want her eight brothers and sisters to join the Job Corps — but she's glad SHE did.

"They don't need it," the former New Mexico resident explained. "They have more opportunities now that they live in California. The Neighborhood Youth Corps, for example, will help them go to college."

The oldest of a Mexican-American family, Mary believes she had no such option. She had never worked before she went into a Job Corps center at Poland Spring, Maine.

"I didn't have any training either," she said. A high school graduate, she wanted to work in an office. After a year and a half "in school" with the Job Corps, she landed a position at the Port of Seattle.

She's been there three years now and likes her job tremendously.

Miss Quintela, like Renee Stewart, looks back on her tenure in the Corps as camp as a learning experience that can't be beat, in the work world or college.

"It toughens you up, but not in a bad, mean way," Miss Stewart said. "If you make it in the Corps, if you get yourself together, you'll learn to survive in the world. You have to."

Miss Stewart, born and raised in the Renton area, now is enrolled at Portland State University. She is a high school graduate who took one quarter at a Bible college before she decided "I wasn't going to be a Bible scholar."

She liked getting a salary, but a part-time job as a "bus girl" cleaning up after restaurant patrons convinced her "I wanted something better than that."

A YWCA resident at the time, she met other girls living there who had taken Job Corps training. Although she believed herself overqualified" for the program, she applied.

Her acceptance took her the Tongue Point Center Astoria, Ore., where she barked on a college preatory program. She nd her 11 months stay re a lesson in discipline, both personal and at the group level.

Miss Quintela and Miss Stewart agreed:

If a girl wanted trouble at the Job Corps training centers, she could find it. The fights — and there were fights — however, were pretty much between individuals or against authority."

Miss Quintela was at the Maine center during "a riot," but she described it as the result of a small group of dissidents who weren't really interested in the program.

"It's too bad they don't bring into the program only girls who really want to do something," she said.

Too many of the girls rebelled against the rules, which Miss Quintela and Miss Stewart described as "logical, when you get a bunch of girls together," yet "stiff."

"I thought the rules really were strict," Miss Stewart said. "There were girls there like myself who were independent and could take care of themselves. To us, the rules were stifling at first."

She "got used to them, and even enjoyed them after a while. It's no different than the Army would be, really, and people find they can live with that."

Miss Stewart would change one thing, however — the lack of students' voice in Corps activities.

"I don't remember that student government helped that much," she recalled. "Mostly, it was just for show. So many of the girls felt it was token participation in Corps affairs, so they wouldn't contribute anything."

She said Job Corps trainees could be effective when they wanted, such as the time they insisted on a choice in how they dressed.

"We were adamant, we worked together, and we got that choice," she pointed out. "It shows what could be done if the students had more of an influence.

In the Job Corps, both young women made close friends with whom they still keep in contact. Both enjoyed the Corps' extra-curricular activities which, at Tongue Point for example, included boating, bowling, skating and dances with men's Job Corps centers.

Each has found acceptance among her peers now that the training is behind them.

"They're really nice to me at work," Miss Quintela said. "They don't mind that I was in the Job Corps; in fact, they're rather proud of it."

Miss Stewart still continues her association with a program for disadvantaged students through Operation Plus, which has offered her financial aid and a college-work study situation.

She presently works 15 hours a week for the university where she is a sophomore. The government pays part of her salary.

The Women in Community Service (WICS) has additional information about the Job Corps program.

Armed Forces Police —Bane of the AWOL

BY MIKE BUCKLEY

Recently, a state trooper stopped to aid a motorist on Interstate 5 north of Bellingham.

While helping the man fix a flat tire, the trooper noticed a military jacket on the rear seat of the car.

Allowing the motorist to proceed, the trooper followed behind while relaying a description over the radio to the Armed Forces Police in Seattle.

Minutes later, the trooper took the man into custody. He was an Army deserter heading towards the Canadian border.

During the past year, an estimated 10,000 armed forces personnel classified as AWOL (absent without leave) — or as deserters — found their way to the Puget Sound region.

Some hoped to cross the border. Others simply decided to take an unofficial "vacation" in Washington or Oregon.

But more than 2,000 unauthorized absentees had their plans upset through a close working relationship between civilian law enforcement authorities and the Puget Sound Armed Forces Police Detachment.

Headquartered at Sand Point the Puget Sound Armed Forces Police is a joint military command, staffed from all branches of the armed services.

More than 80 servicemen trained in law enforcement techniques staff offices in Washington and Orgon.

At the helm of the organization is LT. Col. Saul Arrington, a 24-year Army veteran who has spent most of his military career in law enforcement.

Arrington described the primary mission of the Armed Forces Police as providing an effective communications link between military and civilian law forcement authorities.

ARMY LT. COL. SAUL ARRINGTON, 41, right, commander of the Puget Sound Armed Forces Police Detachment, discussed the group's work as his acting operations supervisor, SFC Carroll Mathis, listened. — [P-I Photo.]

In many areas of the country where Armed Forces Police units operate, duties include patrol to observe conduct of military personnel within the community, court liaison, and the return of unauthorized absentees to military control.

In the Puget Sound region, Armed Forces Police have de-emphasized patrol duties while placing more emphasis on court liaison and apprehension of AWOLees and deserters.

Arrington, who came to the detachment here 18 months ago, said the change-over is basically an updating of the organization's role.

"We visualize our role in the context of other changes taking place within the military," Arrington said.

"We're keeping pace wit the times. At one point, military personnel were required to have liberty passes and to wear uniforms while off-duty. This isn't true today and we've had to adjust accordingly."

To become more effective in pursing the unit's goals, Arrington and other members of the detachment have established close ties with many civilian police departments in the two-state area.

The Armed Forces Police maintain 24 hour operation, staffing offices in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland.

In addition, a patrol is maintained at Sea-Tac to assist military personnel traveling through the area.

Arrington said that the relationship with civilian authorities helps both sides, and aids the taxpayer as well.

"Civilian authorities now know that they don't have to hold a military prisoner in their jail for days on end," Arrington said.

"Hence, they are more eager to assist us, thereby increasing our effectiveness in apprehending unauthorized absentees."

Arrington said that in the past if a police department apprehended two servicemen, each from a different branch, four men were required to return the prisoners to military control.

"We send just two men from our detachment and return the prisoners to their own organization, usually sooner than they would have been returned under the previous system," he said.

"The more efficient use of manpower and equipment means a saving to the public," the colonel added.

In addition to removing military prisoners from civilian jails, the Armed Forces Police here try to keep them out in the first place and to provide assistance to civilian communities.

At Tongue Point Job Corps Center near Astoria, Ore., about 750 young women are able to enjoy an active social life, thanks to Arrington and the AFPD.

Arrington said that off-duty military personnel from Fort Lewis and other posts travel to Tongue Point frequently to visit Job Corps Trainees.

What could have been a disastrous situation for the limited local law enforcement resources there was alleviated by assignment of regular patrols from the detachment.

Local police don't have to worry about 750 dateless young ladies or about overzealous, fun-loving soldiers and airmen.

Arrington is proud of the progress his organization has made and of the service it performs.

Readying to retire from the military this month, the colonel admits he is sorry to leave.

But the 41-year-old commander also hastens to add that he is looking forward to retirement — even though it will last only about 24 hours.

Still young and enthusiastic about continuing in law enforcement, Arrington has secured a position with the State Law and Justice planning staff in Olympia.

Unfortunately for unauthorized absentees, Arrington will leave behind an organization well prepared to handle their important mission.

Sunrise Division Collects Food for the Area Needy

Some 150 Clatsop County families will have a hearty Christmas dinner Saturday thanks to the beneficence of the Sunrise Division of the Clatsop County Sheriff's Reserves.

The organization, with the help of area merchants and Tongue Point Job Corpswomen, has been collecting canned goods and money for fresh food for the Christmas supper for the past several weeks. According to Al Tolson, who's in charge of the project this year, the Sunrise Division gets the names of its Christmas basket recipients from the welfare office, local churches and the Salvation Army.

The 1971 beneficiaries will receive, besides their basket of canned goods, vegetables, potatoes and a turkey purchased by funds donated by area merchants. Tolson says the group tries to stockpile its canned goods during the Christmas season for later distribution to needy families throughout the year. Extra cans of goods are stored in a room in the county courthouse.

This year, in a door to door can campaign, Tongue Pointers gathered some 15 to 20 cases of canned goods. The Sunrise Division accepts can goods contributions at the county jail throughout the year.

Tongue Point center gets new director

EUGENE — Raymond McDonald has been named director of the Tongue Point Job Corp Center for Women at Astoria.

McDonald, 45, director of the Madera Employment Training Center at Madera, Calif., will assume his duties at Tongue Point shortly after the first of the year.

McDonald will fill the post left vacant when Dorothy Burns, who resigned in August to become assistant regional man-power administrator of the U.S. Department of Labor for the Job Corps in the four Northwest states.

As center director, McDonald will be responsible for the general and vocational education program of the 720 women stationed year-round at Tongue Point, and will administer all the related functions of the center which employs 245 persons.

Since 1967, the Center has been operated by the University of Oregon under a contract with the U.S. Department of Labor.

The program is designed to help young women from disadvantaged backgrounds achieve the educational, vocational and social skills necessary to become independent and self-supporting.

McDonald heads the directorship of 29 Job Corps Center in Excelsior Springs, Mo., from 1969 to 1971.

JOINT MEETING OF STUDENT GOVERNMENTS

Ways to improve center procedures and public relations were discussed at a recent joint meeting of representatives from two Oregon centers.

Representatives of the Tongue Point Women's Center Student Government and of the Corpsmen Council of Angell CCC met at Angell for a special brainstorming and training session.

Corpsman supervisor Ervin Haugen welcomed the group and outlined the purpose of the conference. Corpsman Michael Scott, vice president of Angell's Corpsman Council, presided at the meeting.

In the discussion of community relations, many participants said that the public gets more "hearsay" information than facts. Suggestions for improving public relations were encouraging a greater number of area residents to visit the centers and involving Corpsmembers in community service projects. Most Corpsmembers reported that community attitudes were generally favorable regarding their centers.

Corpsman Harry Williams led the group in discussing ways to supplement center welfare funds. The group reviewed dress codes for invitational activities and examined Tongue Point's communication system between the Student Government and the staff.

After the meeting, the Corpsmembers went to a nearby town for a chicken supper and dance.

All agreed that this exchange was beneficial and worthwhile and that other centers should consider similar meetings.

TP Joins Athletic Association

The Tongue Point Job Corps Center has joined with nine other centers in Washington, Oregon and Idaho to form the Northwest Job Corps Athletic Assn.

The purpose of the organization, according to TP Center Life Associate Director Eugene Norris, is to provide intercenter activities for the corpsmen and women and to "stress the cultural values, the appreciation of skills involved and the promotion of sportsmanship and citizenship in all activities." Norris has been elected secretary of the organization.

At present, eight men's conservation centers, the Portland Residential Manpower Training center and Tongue Point belong to the group.

Norris said the association hopes to bring teams to Tongue Point to provide spectators for games and to promote mixed competition like bowling and archery which could include both men and women participants.

Court Ruling May Be Far Reaching

A recent ruling by Oregon's Court of Appeals "may have a crucial effect on merit system employes because it appears to severly limit the authority of the Public Employe Relations Board," according to OSEA staff attorney John S. Irvin.

The ruling upheld an August, 1970 dismissal of a food service employe by the Tongue Point Job Corps Center in Astoria.

The employe was charged with misconduct, insubordination and unfitness to render effective service because of "verbal abuse of food service trainees, a belligerent and arrogant attitude, disruption of cafeteria operations and harrassment of fellow workers."

The employe appealed the dismissal to the PERB and was represented by Irvin.

In its findings and order, the PERB found "that a problem does exist, based on the conduct and attitude of the employe," but held that the testimony of witnesses did not sustain the charges. It set aside the dismissal and ordered the employe reinstated with back pay.

State attorneys then appealed the PERB decision to had acted improperly in substituting its judgment for that of the appointing authority when it overturned the dismissal. It ordered the PERB decision set aside and sustained the dismissal.

OSEA appealed the circuit court decision to the Court of Appeals. Irvin argued that under Oregon law the PERB must make its own independent determination as to whether or not there is sufficient cause for dismissal, regardless of what is determined by the appointing authority.

He based his arguments on case decisions from Oregon and other states, the power of the board to modify a dismissal penalty to some lesser penalty and the fact that the hearing before the board is the first and only hearing the employe receives on the charges against him.

The Court of Appeals ruled, however, that such power in the hands of the board "would result in vesting disciplinary power of the various state agencies over their employes in the board and not the agencies which appoint them. Such a result would undermine their authority and hamper efficient agency administration."

The court helf that the Tongue Point Job Corps Center had only to show that it was not arbitrary in taking the dismissal action.

"By this opinion it appears that a regular status employe has little more, if any, job protection than a trial service employe," Irvin said.

Job Corps Trainee Leaves for Oregon

LOMPOC — Josefa Morales, 21, daughter of Mrs. Ramona Morales, 315 S. J St., has departed for Astoria, Ore., as a Job Corps enrolee.

Miss Morales is a graduate of Lompoc Senior High School.

The Job Corps program is for young men and women who want to hold jobs but do not have the training or education to do so, according to a spokesman for the Lompoc Junior Alpha Club which is helping to enlist volunteers.

Mrs. George B. Waudby of the club said young women interested in the Job Corps may contact her at RE 6-0678 or inquire at the Rural Manpower Services office at 103 W. Ocean Ave.

To qualify as an enrollee, applicants must be between the ages of 16 and 22 and be from low income or culturally deprived backgrounds. Enrollees receive basic education through the high school level and specialized training in such fields as clerical work, health services and salesmanship.

Many Job Corps graduates have gone on to college or to jobs such as key punch operators, food service managers, hostess-dining room managers and drafting clerks and marking assistants.

Women enrollees from the Lompoc area may either go to the Job Corps centers in Los Angeles or Astoria, Ore. At the center, they receive a living allowance, clothing allowance, medical and dental care and travel expenses home after completion of the six month course.

Maria Garcia looks for future through Job Corps

She hopes to be able to afford something more for her mother's Christmas gift in the future, but meanwhile Maria Garcia, right, has made her Spanish-speaking mother happy with a butterfly she made in crafts classes at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center near Astoria, Ore. Maria is learning proper procedures for cleaning business offices, motels and hospitals while taking classes in reading, math and cooking. Her mother, Mrs. Tony Hernandez, at left, is thankful for her daughter's opportunity to learn fine arts while training for employment.

By MARY JO MILNE

Maria Garcia, 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tony Hernandez, 1206 S. Columbia, has a much happier smile this holiday season.

A year ago she was only 15, a junior high school drop out and out of work. This year she's on her way to a productive future.

She arrived home for Christmas vacation from the Job Corps at Tongue Point, near Astoria, Ore., where she is learning what she felt she couldn't learn fast enough in high school.

"I wasn't interested in classes I was taking at school and I wanted to be able to work and help my family," she says.

The Hernandez family moved here just over a year ago from California, with Maria, her two brothers and five sisters.

"I wanted to go to work sooner to help support the family so I quit school in the freshman year."

But it wasn't all that easy, Maria found. She was too young and had had no training.

"Maria was referred to us by the Valley Neighborhood Center," says Mrs. Louis Kirschner, project director of the WICS, Women in Community Service.

This local organization of volunteers has placed girls in Job Corps centers at Omaha, Neb., Los Angeles, Calif., and at Moses Lake before it closed.

"We've sent seven or so from here to Tongue Point, a former Naval Air Station," Mrs. Kirschner says.

The Job Corps is certainly not recommended as a reason for dropping out of school, Mrs. Kirschner advises.

"The Corps is finding it hard to keep up with the needs and all whoapply don't qualify," she says.

She cited two local cases where girls were encouraged to stay at home and further their schooling. They were too young and immature to fit immediately into a dormitory situation away from their families.

"One girl in special education applied and we paid for her psychiatric examination before recommending her to the Job Corps. Since she didn't have the required learning potential we sugested that her family keep her at home and seek what futher special training the pulic schools could offer."

But Maria is one of the rare ones who wants to learn, but prefers special job training to public school education.

She works at her training job, in business office and clinical cleaning, from 8:30 a.m. until noon each day and has classes from 1 to 5 p.m. There's also a class in art.

When Maria reports back to the center on Monday she will go to a nearby hospital for training in clinical work.

After six months Maria is entitled to accumulate a "mustering out" pay for a nest egg when she is looking for work. She hopes to stay for the whole two years of training and receive a diploma in general education. Then she'd like to come back home and get a part-time job and attend Wenatchee Valley College.

"We hated to see Maria drop out of high school, but she seems happier doing this and it won't take so long," says her father.

Maria's mother speaks very little English, so the children speak Spanish fluently. This could give Maria an advantage in obtaining work where Spanish is spoken. Or it could give her a head start in seeking a job as an interpreter.

Maria feels that each generation should try to better themselves to serve as an example for succeeding generations.
